

Burmanning / Peters / M. d. d.
A N
^N
O R A T I O N
BY ⁶²⁵⁷

Mr. PETER BURMAN

AGAINST THE
STUDIES OF HUMANITY.

SHEWING,

That the Learned Languages, HISTORY, ELOQUENCE and CRITICK, are not only Useless, but also Dangerous to the Studies of Law, Physick, Philosophy, and above all of DIVINITY; to which last POETRY is a special help.

Translated into ENGLISH, and the ORIGINAL Annex.

L O N D O N:

Printed for J. W. and Sold by J. Roberts in Warwick-Lane. M DCC XXI.

[Price 1 s. 6 d.]

The

common
Mr. Bu
in the U nounce followi florship nary pa
of Grac need an Admire Oration
of the Decay
with w norant,
many e
has wit Objecti
He plea
most L
but espe shamefu
guages;
ner aga effect t wou'd or are

The Translator's PREFACE.

IS a Custom in most of the Foreign Universities for the Rector Magnus to make an Oration upon what Subject he pleases, when he enters upon his Office, and to make another when he lays it down. Those Pieces are commonly much labour'd, and no less instructive. Mr. Burman, Professor of History and Eloquence in the University of Leyden, did accordingly pronounce the fine Harangue, of which I give the following Translation, when he quitted the Rectorship on the 8th of Feb. 1720. The extraordinary parts and learning of this Favourite Disciple of Grævius are too well known in the World, to need an Encomium from me or any other of his Admirers. But I may venture to say, that this Oration is one of the most elegant Productions of the Age. Our Professor observing the great Decay of the politer Studies, and the Contempt with which some, who would not be thought ignorant, affect to treat them, without excepting many eminent Members of the Learned Faculties, has with admirable Wit and Address expos'd their Objections, under the pretence of justifying them. He pleasantly ridicules the barbarous Style in which most Lawyers, Physicians, and Philosophers write: but especially the jargon of the Divines, who also shamefully neglect the Study of the Original Languages; and who frequently inveigh in such a manner against the abuse of History and Critic, as in effect to take away the use of them; because they wou'd not be at the pains of explaining difficulties, or are unable to solve them, or not candid enough to acknowledge them. Such as deserve another Character will not, I dare say, be angry with him for this publick Service. In prosecuting his Subject he produces the chief of those difficulties, and shows a vast fund of reading and observation even out of his own Province. But one known to Dr. Bentley (who will be allow'd by all Men of Letters, that are not his Enemies, to be a very competent Judge) has given the true Key of this Oration in the Answer to the Remarks made upon his Proposals of printing a New Edition of the Greek Testament, pag. 36. I thank our dear English Casuist (says the Doctor's Friend) for quoting the Dutch Orator. Here's an Instance of his stupor and insensibility, beyond any of the famous Tom Coryat. Mr. Burman's Oration, made last Year, when he laid down his Office of Rector Magnificus, a very fine one in its way, is all writ in Lucian's manner, a thorough Irony and Jeer. He tells the Audience, that to make a compleat finish'd Divine, there's no need of any Skill at all, either in Languages, or History, or Eloquence, or Critic. These four Topics he agreeably pursues: and in the last of them, has that Passage which our Escobar has chosen for his Motto. The Dutch Orator supposed, that all Men of common Sense would read his Meaning backwards; but he met with an English Cabbage-head, that takes him to be in good earnest: as being indeed of that Opinion before, and believing himself a profound Theologue, without any of those four ill Qualities. Whoever he be, he's not the only Divine that has such a fancy. But I shall no longer detain the Reader from the Pleasure and Instruction he may justly hope from Professor Burman: and lest any of the Beauties of the Original should be lost in my Translation (as many I fear there are, however faithfully the Sense be render'd) I have join'd the Latin to the English, for the sake of the Curious.

The P R E F A C E.

Mr. BUR-

Mr. BURMAN's
ORATION,
In Latin and English.

PETRI BURMANNI

ORATIO

IN

HUMANITATIS STUDIA.

UO unumquemque studio duci & delectari, inter omnes satis constat; neque facile hominem invenias, qui non illa, quibus se excellere putat, omnium rerum prima, se vero, qui ea possidet, pulchrum & beatum esse arbitretur. Neque indoctam modo multitudinem, & illiteratos artifices caeco erga sua opera amore auferri, sed ipsos, qui superbo sapientiae & doctrinae titulo se à vulgo segregant, hoc communi morbo ita adfectos esse videmus, ut cum aliarum contemtionem suas semper disciplinas extollant, & tamquam unicas filiolas exof-

PETER BURMAN'S
ORATION
AGAINST THE
STUDIES OF HUMANITY.

OTHING is more certain, than that every One is biaſſed by ſome particular Inclination and Study of his own : It being at the ſame time hardly poſſible to find a Man who does not ſet the higheſt Value upon thoſe things in which he imagines his chief Excellence lies, as well as applaud himſelf for his own Happineſs, in being ſo well accompliſhed. Nor is this conceited Partiality confin'd to the ignorant Vulgar and illiterate Mechanic only ; but has ſpread it ſelf like an epidemical Diſtemper over all Ranks and Conditions of Men ; ſince we cannot help obſerving that even thoſe who diſtinguiſh themſelves from the common Herd, by Titles that denote their great Gravity and Learning, are fondly prejudiced in favour of their own particular Profeſſions, even to the deſpiſing and running down of all others. Now if exosculentur. Si vero in causas inconcinnae & absurdae ostentationis penitus introspeciamus, paucos certa persuasione de se & suis vera praedicare, sed plurimos aliarum artium ignoratione peccare, alios cupiditate, ambitione aut avaritia abreptos, sua commoda & rationes veritati praesferre, & pro solida laude vanissimae gloriolae umbram consecrari, deprehendemus. Quotus enim quisque reperitur, sua laudans, aliena culpans, qui ita in omnium rerum variam & multiplicem cognitionem, ejusque interiores recessus, penetravit, ut, singulis inter se comparatis, verum unicuique pretium statuere, & uni prae alia admirabilem quamdam excellentiam assignare possit? Immo quotus quisque non plebeja potius trutina, quam aequa artificis statera ita omnia propriae scientiae momenta examinavit, ut ad illam, quam sequitur, probandam & praefarendam, certo judicio & ratione impulsus se esse, aliis persuadeat? An non maxima eruditorum portio, si simpliciter & id quod res est eloqui vellet, inconsiderato se impetu, parentum & amicorum auctoritates secutos, in illas se toto animo doctrinas dedisse fateri cogerentur, quae vel ad ingenii illustrioris famam, vel ad honores capiendos, vel ad rem faciendam, accommodatiores aliis ostendebantur? quibus deinde, cum seruum est eas dediscere vel mutare, tam certis & destinatis sententiis se addicunt & consecrant, ut etiam factioso furore partes semel temere susceptas defendant. Cum vero post levem saepe & exigui temporis operam eas profiteri & exercere festinaverint, è re sua esse ducunt venales proponere, & tabernam non utilibus tantum & necessariis, sed fallacibus & fucosis mercibus instruere, quas omnibus lenociniorum illecebris commendent. Quid? an non ipsos hos bonae

we look
absurd their O selves o for wan Others, own M stead o empty who cr fessions Recess
lar so e real Val lity in v
who, i Judgm
own S among Artific
have h the Tru
ing an they ha were p acquire tune :
and ri
their O
the Ca
the Par little T
take up it will cording
moditi
comm

we look a little closer into the Causes of this wrong, this absurd Behaviour, we shall find that few of these ground their Opinions upon a true Knowledge, either of themselves or their Studies; but that most of them are mistaken for want of being acquainted with other Arts and Sciences. Others, hurried away with Ambition or Avarice, set up their own Measures and Interest in the room of Truth, and, instead of solid Applause, catch at the Shadow of the most empty Vain-glory. For shew me the Man among these, who cry up their own, and find such fault with the Professions of others, that has penetrated so far into the deep Recesses of general Learning, and compar'd every Particular so exactly with each other, as to be able to state the real Value of each, and to point out the wonderful Quality in which one excels another. Nay, shew me the Man, who, in order to prove that his Choice is grounded upon Judgment and Reason, does not weigh the Merits of his own Science, rather by Scales which have been in use among the People, than by the exact Ballance of a true Artificer. Would not the greatest Part of those who have had a learned Education, if they would but speak the Truth, be obliged to own, that generally by yielding an implicit Obedience to their Parents or Friends, they have given themselves up to those Professions which were pointed out to them, for such as would most easily acquire them the greatest Reputation, Dignity, or Fortune: To which afterwards they so firmly list themselves, and rivet their Opinions when it is too late to alter their Course or unlearn any thing; that they will defend the Cause they have thus inconsiderately espoused, with all the Party Rage that can be imagined. And when, with little Time and less Pains they have qualified themselves to take upon them to exercise their Business, they next judge it will be for their Interest to expose it to sale; and accordingly they furnish their Shops, not with useful Commodities, but with false and counterfeit, advertis'd and recommended with a parcel of smooth, insinuating fustian nae mentis. mercatus, ad quos rerum imprudentes juvenes magna contentione confluere solent, confusis & inconditis institorum clamoribus resonare audi-mus? & ex hujus cupiditatis fonte, tamquam rivulos, tot gloriosas orationes defluere videmus, quibus mercatores graviorum, ut ajunt, disciplinarum incautos adolescentium animos invitant & adlectant, ut praeteritis humiliorum artium sellis, apud suas officinas diversentur, & expositas ibi doctrinas ad utilitatem & necessitatem nundinentur? Quis vestrum A. hoc sacrarium initurus, ut publice verba fa-cientem Professore audiat, aliud animo suo praecipere solet, quam ut illi, de suae disciplinae antiquitate, praestantia & praeter ceteras dignitate declamanti, defatigatas pervulgato argumento aures leviter, cum unius borulae jactura, sit commodaturus? praesertim cum in illas eruditionis copiae sint redactae angustias, ut raro alicujus scientiae Doctor regni & scholae suae fines & terminos egredi vel audeat, vel possit. Sed ne in ipso sta-tim orationis limine insolentem & acerbam laudatissimarum artium censuram exercere videar, am-bitiosae hujus ostentationis in primis Humanitatis & Elegantiarum Professores reos agere non dubita-bo; meque ipsum, inter illos, qui populari blanditia & assentatione discipulos undique corrogare, eorumque benevolentiam colligere nituntur, non ultimo loco esse collocandum, fateri non erubescam. Non pudebit hodie prae me ferre, eum me aliquando fuisse, qui meditato & exquisito sermone, Linguarum, Eloquentiae, & Historiarum laudes amplifi-care,

Expressi
 Academ
 derstand ly crow
 of the
 mulatio down l
 the mo tice our rior A
 with th
 peal to upon ce Public, having Harang
 his Pro have be Faculty
 yond th
 But tha
 my Dis
 passing are held the first fessors glorious my self make i and litt
 as they bation.
 that the meditate upon t
 quentre,

Expressions. For don't we hear the very Markets of this Academy, stor'd as they are with Learning and sound Understanding, and to which our raw Youth so contentiously crowd, ring again with the confus'd inharmonious Cries of the Hucksters? Is it not from the Fountain of this Emulation that we behold so many glorious Orations roll down like Rivulets as it were, by which the Retailers of the more serious Studies (as they are call'd) invite and entice our heedless Youth to pass over the Stalls of the inferior Arts, and to stay and equip themselves at their Shops with the most useful and advantageous Professions? I appeal to you, Gentlemen Academics, whether any of you upon coming into the Schools to hear a Professor speak in Public, ever proposes to himself any thing more, than having his Ears fatigu'd for near an Hour with a fullsom Harangue upon the Antiquity, Excellence, and Dignity of his Profession; especially since the Forces of Learning have been so reduc'd, that there is scarce a Doctor in any Faculty, who has either the Courage or Ability to go beyond the Bounds of that petty Kingdom, his own School? But that I may not be thought at the very first step of my Discourse to use too much bitterness and freedom in passing a Censure upon those parts of Learning, which are held in the highest Veneration among us, I shall in the first place make no scruple of impeaching the Professors of Humanity and Elegance, as guilty of this vain-glorious Ostentation: and shall not blush to own, that I my self have been one of those notorious Offenders, who make it their Business by all manner of popular Artifices and little Insinuations to scrape together as many Scholars as they can, and to court their good-liking and approbation. I shall not be ashamed this moment to declare, that there was a Time when I was the Man who in premeditated set Speeches made it my endeavour to enlarge upon the Commendations of the Languages, of Eloquence, and of History, and to evince that it was something care, & magnum aliquid & praeclarum esse, Graece & Latine scire, dicendo efficere sum conatus. Sed aliquot abhinc annis totus mihi displicere coepi, & consilii à primis annis capti pervicacia, & ipsae illae, quas olim juvenili dicendi licentia, & vincendi ma-gis quam veritatis studio habui, orationes maturiori aetati incutiunt ruborem. Irascor mihi, quod à mei ordinis & studii viris persuaderi mihi sim pas-sus, nihil ad omnia tempora utilius, nihil ad vitam privatam & publicam elegantius, nihil ad lau-dem & famam praestabilius inveniri posse, quam mentem interioribus literis excultam & perpolitam habere. Indignor dictatoria illa magistrorum, quos sequebar, praecepta fecisse atque effecisse, ut illi togatorum ordini me adscribi sustinnerim, qui ex primis, quem obtinere solebat, loco detrusus, vix infinum, quem precario possidet, hodie in Academiis tueripotest. Quotidie stomachari non desisto, eam me vitae meae legem dixisse, ut perpetuo inter Gramma-ticorum & Criticorum subsellia sit consensendum; neque ausum fuisse majora spirare, aut principibus inter eruditos viris adnumerari ambivisse. Cujus doloris & poenitentiae ut plenissimam hodie Vobis A. fidem faciam, non tralatitio circulatorum more, qui jam per omnes cathedras pervasit, merces meas jactabo & excutiam; nec orationem conquisito ex Rhetorum officinis pigmento adspersgens, de literarum, quas profiteor, utilitate & praestantia insolent-ter gloriabor; sed vineta mea cadere, & aperto, sed atroci stilo, omnia Humanitatis studia, quae sua & decentium culpa merito jacent, confodere; eorumque non modo difficultatem, vilitatem & mi-nime

thing. tr
 Latin.
 Humor Opinion
 as those young M
 selytes,
 with Sh
 suffer'd sion, th more el proper t in the v improv'd of Learn those M
 my self
 all Unive at prefer every da fort of versation Courage
 have enr World. give you the pedl
 up and my Orat of the U ing whi
 former a a full a nity, wh them; an shall shew

O R A T I O N.

9

thing truly Great and Noble, to understand Greek and Latin. But for some Years past I have been quite out of Humour with my self: And as well the Bigotry to that Opinion which I espous'd in the beginning of my Life, as those very Orations, which, by a Liberty usual with young Men, I made rather with a Design of gaining Profelytes, than advancing the Truth, fill my riper Years with Shame and Confusion. I am vext to think that I suffer'd my self to be persuaded by those of my Profession, that nothing was more useful at all Times, nothing more elegant in public and private Life, nothing more proper to establish a handsome Character and Reputation in the World, than for one's Understanding to be well improv'd and thoroughly polish'd with a reasonable Stock of Learning. I repine that the dogmatical Precepts of those Masters whom I follow'd, prevail'd with me to list my self in that Company, which from being the first in all Universities, is degraded to the very last Rank, and has at present but a precarious Title even to that. I reflect every day with Regret at having impos'd upon my self a sort of Life, which cannot well be spent but in the Conversation of Critics and Grammarians; and for wanting Courage to aspire to greater matters, and not striving to have enrol'd my Name among the Chiefs of the learned World. Of which Sorrow and Repentance that I may give you the surest Conviction, I will not, according to the pedling Method practis'd in every Chair besides, cry up and hold out my own Goods to you; nor, daubing my Oration with the Colours of Rhetoric, vainly boast of the Usefulness and Excellency of that Part of Learning which I profess; but I am determin'd to turn Informer against my Self, and to point my Speech with a full and sharp Thrust at all those Studies of Humanity, which, thro' their own Defects and those that teach them, are so deservedly neglected. At the same time I shall shew not only the Difficulty in attaining them, the nime fructuosam sterilitatem, sed funestam in primis contagionem, & periculosam graviorum disciplinarum cum illis societatem ostendere decrevi. Quod si dicendo consequi, aut rationibus ullam huius propositi partem cordatis persuadere nequivero, redundet haec quoque infelicitas in futilium artium cultorem, qui, cum Eloquentiam profiteatur, ne id quidem, quod omnes fere sequuntur & probant, evincere valuerit. Quamvis autem maxime mihi laesandum sit, apud illos agendi occasionem oblatam, qui non modo in eadem opinione versantur, sed illam omnibus, qui se ad eos adplicant, induere conantur, praecipua tamen me spes tenet, non plane inefficacem apud vos, facillimi Adolescentes, Orationem futuram. In praejudicatam illico vos sententiam ituros confido, ubi perspexeritis, quam proclivi ad sensu consilia vestra & parentum rationes comprobare laborem. Ubi recte & ordine vos facere pronuntium, si dimissi à manu & serula paedagogorum, barbatis senibus auscultantes, haec plebejae caveae subsellia transcendatis, & saltu in orchestram facto, noxias pietati, famae, eruditioni & arcae literas, quae humanitatis nomen mentiuntur, relinquatis. Quo non favore, quo non adplausu me dicentem prosequemini, si ostenderim, neminem vestrum ad aliquam nominis celebritatem aut fortunarum incrementum, sive inter ceremoniarum antistites, sive iustitiae sacerdotes, sive salutis humanae custodes, sive sapientiae magistros adspirare posse, qui se nostris studiis inquinandum permiserit. Ad quod probandum, non auctoritates & exempla, quae in obvia & domestica copia cumulare esset pu-

Poor-

Poornefs
ally the f Studies
ted into in making Reasons
more Mis idle Scien evince an all the W have grea plead this ever of t to instill yet I have altogether Youth.
preconcei approve y your Pare be just an vy Hands take the these mob
the Stage falsely int tion, fou
and Appl pear that with our tation or Rites and Guardians
the Proof which in seous to e

Poornefs and Unprofitableneſs of them; but more eſpecially the ſad Tendency of them, to infect and indanger Studies of a graver Nature, if ever they ſhould be admitted into their Company. And if I ſhould chance to fail in making out my Propoſition, or in giving convincing Reaſons for any part of it to the Ingenuous; then one more Miſfortune would attend me as a Cultivator of theſe idle Sciences, ſince, tho' I profeſs Eloquence, I could not evince and make out that Side of the Queſtion, which all the World allow and approve of. But now, tho' I have great Reaſon to rejoice, in being ſo happy as to plead this Matter before thoſe who have not only been ever of the ſame Opinion themſelves, but do their beſt to inſtill it into all that are any ways attach'd to them; yet I have great Hopes that my Diſcourſe will not prove altogether ineffectual with You, the gentle well-natur'd Youth. I am confident that you will ſoon run into this preconceiv'd Opinion, when you ſee how ready I am to approve your Purſuits, and fall in with the Meaſures of your Parents. When I ſhall pronounce your Conduct to be juſt and regular, if upon being diſmiſs'd from the heavy Hands and Ferulas of tyrannizing Pædagogues, you take the Advice of the moſt venerable Folks, ſkip over theſe mobbiſh Seats of the Pit, and leaping at once into the Stage-Boxes, leave behind you that Part of Learning, falſely intitled Humanity, as injurious to Piety, Reputation, ſound Inſtruction and Intereſt. With what Favour and Applauſe will you not honour me, if I make it appear that none of you who ſuffers himſelf to be polluted with our Studies, can ever aſpire to any pitch of Reputation or Fortune; either among the Commiſſioners of Rites and Ceremonies, the Miniſters of the Law, the Guardians of our Health, or the Maſters of Wiſdom. For the Proof of which, I will not ſearch for Precedents, which in ſo obvious and great a Plenty it would be nauſeous to enumerate, but lightly touching upon every kind of

putidum, undique conquiram; sed leviter per singulas disciplinas pervagando, populari & pervulgata argumentatione Acroaterii hujus adprobationem captare studebo.

Omnium, quotquot sint, doctrinarum principem & reginam esse coelestium rerum meditationem, nemo, qui quotidianis sermonibus celebrari audit, diffiteri sustinebit: Eamque jure suo primos honores occupasse, & reliquas, ut administras & comites, ex alto despicere, neque earum ope & adjumento indigere, nisi cum placuerit ancillas in partem vilioris operae & laboris vocare, in controversiam vocari nequit. Fastidiosa in primis domina cavere studet, ne temere in ejus adyta & sacraria irrumpatur, neque initiandi spem facit, nisi illis, qui mentem purgatam, & sublimioris scientiae capacem ad sacra sua attulerint, non terrena faece pollutam, non humanis sordibus contaminatam. Duo vero dominatricis disciplinae principia & fundamenta, quibus tota nititur, à sacrorum mystis prodita esse accepimus; divinam primum auctoritatem, libris & tabulis, ab ultima antiquitate transmissis, consignatam: summam deinde in divinae mentis & doctrinae interpretatione concordiam & conspirationem, non quidem omnium, sed pietate & doctrina illustrium virorum, qui in unum conducti, post diligenter existimatam & omnibus momentis suis ponderatam Dei legem, certam & definitam publicae persuasioni prodiderunt regulam, ad quam omnia iudicia dirigantur, qua vera & falsa dijudicentur; ultra quam citraque consistere nulli liceat; aut semel decreta refigere vel convellere permittatur. Ad haec duo facillima & expedita doctrinae capita qui studia & lucubrationes exegerit, numeris omnibus

of Le
mon Audien
Honor Study
ral kin that sh look d
and A
for an
the po or me guards presum drawin Audien
cleans'
ence, u Rags o
Stewar
or func intirely God, f
down great H
pretatio
by ever their P ther, a Law o determi
suasion, betwixt footing and tha
been th

of Learning. I will endeavour by the most popular common way of arguing, to gain the Approbation of this Audience. There is no body, who considers the Honour that is daily paid to it, but must own that the Study of Divinity is Queen and Sovereign of the several kinds of Learning: Nor is there any Dispute but that she has a Right to take Place of all the rest, and to look down upon them from her lofty Throne as her Maids and Attendants; but without having the least Occasion for any Assistance from them, unless she pleases to honour the poor Wenches with some little Part of her Drudgery or meanest Work. The first Thing that this nice Lady guards cautiously against, is, that no bold Intruder rashly presume to enter her private Apartments, her sacred Withdrawing-Rooms; nor can any hope to be admitted to an Audience of her, but those that bring a Mind thoroughly cleans'd and proper to be the Receptacle of so sublime a Science, unpolluted with earthly Dregs, undefil'd with the sordid Rags of Humanity. But we have been inform'd by the Stewards of her Household, that there are two principal or fundamental Points upon which this despotic Profession intirely depends. First, A Commission or Authority from God, sign'd and seal'd in Books and Writings transmitted down from the most ancient Antiquity; Secondly, The great Harmony and Agreement there has been in the Interpretation of the Divine Will and Doctrine: and that not by every Body, but by some particular Men famous for their Piety and Learning; who laying their Heads together, and very scrupulously weighing and considering this Law of God, did from thence constitute a certain and determinate Rule for the modelling of every Man's Persuasion, which is so to direct all Opinions and distinguish betwixt Truth and Falshood, that there can be no sure footing for those that tread beyond or short of this Line, and that no one has Liberty to alter or abolish what has been thus once decreed. He that finishes his Lucubrations bus absolutus divinae sapientiae interpres habetur. Artes vero, quae ad humanitatem pertinent, licet variae doctrinae ostentatores in infinita membra concidere soleant, nos tamen hodie ad quatuor species revocabimus, Grammaticae primum & sermonis antiqui cognitionem, temporis deinde prioris & Historiarum scientiam, tum Eloquentiae exercitationem, Criticam postremo de omnium operibus dijudicationem. Quae singula & universa, non dico pernoscenti, sed delibandi etiam, humanae industriae spem esse desperatissimam omnes uno ore confitentur, & si jam ea esset ingenii vis & laboris vehementia, ut per eas procedere quis posset, minime tamen frugiferam esse, quae illis insumitur, operam, aut aliquid inde praesidii aut ornamenti sacris studiis accedere; sed disciplinae à Deo proditae, & concordibus suffragiis comprobatae auctoritatem praecipue inde convelli & labefactari, nunc erit ostendendum.

Trium vero, ut inde incipiam, gentium, Hebraeae, Graecae & Latinae ab eruditis linguae celebrari solent, quarum singularum cognitio non modo difficilis & laboriosa, sed ab omni perdiscendi spe deposita & destituta. Si quis enim ad Graeci vel Romani sermonis intelligentiam ita unice incumbere vellet, ut eam plane adsequatur, vita eum prius, quam labor & materia deficeret. Ridenda enim potius, quam confutanda eorum est gloriatio, qui tam scite, tam eleganter se utraque lingua scribere & loqui posse jactant, ut si in antiqua tempora redeundi, & Athenis vel Romae illis ver-ba

accordi
account pleat in Arts wi
those w they are present ledge o quainta Times;
Judgme
Author
all Men say of cially: Strengt
all, I taken in or bring by Scrip
which and m would

I sha celebrat Knowle
and lab utterly apply h with i would
his Tas
laught write a Langua
Times

according to these two easy concise Points of Learning, is accounted to all intents and purposes a most absolute compleat Interpreter of the Divine Wisdom. Now as for the Arts which belong to the Study of Humanity, though by those who value themselves upon shewing their Learning, they are slic'd out into an Infinity of Parts, yet I shall at present reduce them to these four Heads: First, a Knowledge of Grammar and the ancient Languages; next, Acquaintance with History and the Transactions of former Times; then, the Practice of Eloquence; and lastly, a Judgment truly Critical to examine the Works of every Author. All and every one of which, by the Confession of all Men, Human Industry must for ever despair, I do not say of knowing thoroughly, but even of tasting superficially: and if one really had that Quickness of Parts and Strength of Application, as to be able to go thro' them all, I shall immediately make it appear, that the pains taken in them would not be of the least advantage to us, or bring any Light and Assistance to the Study of the Holy Scriptures; but that the Authority of this Discipline, which has been handed down to us from God himself, and moreover confirm'd by such unanimous Suffrages, would be very much shaken and impair'd by it.

I shall begin first with the Consideration of those three celebrated Tongues the Hebrew, Greek and Latin; the Knowledge of every one of which is not only difficult and laborious to come at, but the thorough Attainment utterly to be despair'd of. For if any one should wholly apply himself to learn the Greek and Roman Languages with intent to become a perfect Master of them, he would much sooner arrive at the end of his Life than of his Task. For the vain Boasting of those deserves to be laugh't at rather than confuted, who pretend they can write and discourse so properly and elegantly in both these Languages, that if it were possible to go back to the Times of Antiquity, and that they might have an Oppor-ba faciendi facultas daretur, non minores se Demosthene vel Cicerone plausus relatu-rant. Modestius & verius de hodiernis conatibus illi existimare videntur, qui eloquentissimos hodie, & nitore orationis praeter ceteros insignes, tam barbaros, tam inelegantes prae antiquis esse censent, ut, cum vix millesimam earum linguarum partem sint adsecuti, neque vernaculam dicendi urbanitatem, neque veram pronuntiandi rationem pernoscant, digni forent, si in Areopago, vel pro Rostris os aperire auderent, qui mulierum & puerorum sibilis exploderetur. Quae cum earum, quae non-dum plane conicescant, & quae tam expressa sui vestigia reliquerunt, linguarum sit conditio, quis tam improbus, ut unquam Israeliticae, plane emortuae, & quae praeter unicum veteris sermonis monumentum nihil nobis transmisit, cognitionem se adsecuturum speret? Stultus ergo & inanis quicumque illis linguis, ultra prima elementa, a sacrae doctrinae studiosis labor impenditur, qui numquam ad metam attingere, aut attendentibus operae pre-tium persolvere possit. Sed demus eo vesariae ali-quem progressum, ut omnes adolescentiae annos in longa linguarum commentatione perdere voluerit, quid deinde, ubi ad divinae doctrinae meditationem accesserit, ornamenti, aut subsidii adferre poterit, nisi tenuem, & splendidum magis quam utilem ap-paratum, & quem nullo negotio aliunde mutuari potuisset? Architectos mihi & fabros respicite, qui stupendis operibus & substructionibus in admirationem ingenii & sollertiae spectatores rapiunt, an hi quoque tyrocinii, velociter labentis, annos inter eorum, qui servili opera ferramenta & fabrilia instrumenta fabricantur, sellas inutiliter consumunt?

 Immo vero recta potius se ad aedificandi & architectandi disciplinam adplicant, quam cum perceperunt,

tunity
 they sh Demost
 our mo
 are of they w in com
 that ha Langu Express should Rostra, Childre
 have n
 hind th
 who c Know
 being mitted
 upon t
 just k vain, f make should
 his Lif wards
 ment
 poor such a
 out an workn
 their
 the sh
 dance is to n Use?

tunity of speaking at Athens or Rome, they are confident they should acquit themselves with as much Applause as Demosthenes or Cicero. Those People seem to judge of our modern Essays with more Truth and Modesty, who are of Opinion that the most eloquent of our times, and they who shine most in the Beauty of their Orations, are in comparison of the Ancients so barbarous and inelegant, that having never attain'd to the thousandth part of those Languages, nor understanding the fashionable Mode of Expression, nor the true way of pronouncing, if they should dare to open their Mouths at the Areopagus or the Rostrum, they would deserve to be hiss'd by the Women and Children. Which being the case of those Languages that have not as it were quite done speaking, and have left behind them such plain and distinct Traces of themselves, who can be so wicked as ever to hope for attaining the Knowledge of the Israelitish, which is quite dead; there being but one Monument of that ancient Tongue transmitted down to our Times. Therefore all Pains bestow'd upon these Languages by Students in Divinity, more than just knowing the Characters of them, are foolish and vain, for they can never answer the End propos'd, nor make it worth their while. But granting some one should be so mad as to desire to throw away the Prime of his Life in a long Study of the Languages, when afterwards he comes to apply himself to Divinity, what Ornament or Support can he bring to it from them, but a poor thin Dress, more shewish than substantial, and such as he might have borrow'd somewhere else without any Trouble? Consider your Architects and Master-workmen, who create Admiration in those that behold their stupendous Works and Buildings; do they waste the short time of their Apprenticeships in needless Attendance at the Shops of those, whose servile Employment is to make Iron Tools of all sorts, fit for a Workman's Use? No: they rather apply themselves out of hand to the runt, ex viliorum opificum tabernis necessariam arti suae suppellectilem comportant. Imitemini, divinae sapientiae candidati, fabricatorum prudentiam, & temporis, rei pretiosissimae, jacturam metuentes, adventitiis & commodatis ex aerumnosa Grammaticorum officina copiis vires domesticas firmate. Nec Panico terrore trepidantes dubitate, ubi, periculo in literis & linguis facto, in sacrum ordinem cooprandi eritis, quin satis scientes priscae sermonis, satis literati, gravissimis patrum consensibus existimemini, si post aliquot hebdomadarum meditationem, adjumento Lexicorum & Grammaticorum, minutissimam sacri portionem legate & explicare vos posse ostenderitis. Hoc vero enavigato freto, hanc praetervectis Charybdim navem subducere, & tamquam in tutissimo portu, apud lixas & calones vernaculos diversari licebit, qui immensae & redundant praekonum turbae uberrima quotidianae loquacitatis pabula, & perennem concionandi materiam subministrabunt. Nec inutilem modo, sed noxiam in primis esse sanctissimae religioni elaboratam nimis linguarum peritiam, inter mystas est exploratum. Quid enim non audet, quid non committit profana Grammaticorum manus? Syllabas, verba, dictiones, universum Orationis ambitum, in omnes partes versare, nulli interpretationi, constitutae licet & comprobatae, acquiescere, jactare alienam stuporem, suam perspicacitatem, qua se plus videre antiquis, & novam verborum vim primos eruisse gloriantur, pervulgata Paedagogorum est consuetudo. In Hebraico codice, unico dubiae &

in-

Studies o
they unde
of those r Business.
the Discr
cious Tin Forces an Shop of t Essay in with a fo
ders; for miners w the ancien
the assista
your selve Scripture.
escap'd th
fel in a fa tell in yo tices; wh the Clerg
an everlast upon. F that a ver but very is it that dertake?
common and turn whole Sc particular bliss'd; c
ing of th fee so m
the First
They pot

Studies of Building and Architecture, which as soon as they understand, they furnish themselves from the Shops of those mean Artificers with Instruments proper for their Business. Ye Competitors for Divine Wisdom, imitate the Discretion of Builders, and for fear of losing your precious Time, strengthen your own Household Troops with Forces and Ammunition ready furnished, by the laborious Shop of the Grammmarians. And after having made a little Essay in Learning and the Languages, don't be terrified with a foolish Panic about your being admitted into Orders; for doubt not but the venerable Board of your Examiners will think you sufficiently learned and knowing in the ancient Tongues, if after a few Weeks Preparation by the assistance of Lexicons and Grammars, you can shew your selves able to read and construe a Verse or two of Scripture. Now when once you have shot this Gulf, and escap'd this dreadful Charybdis, you may anchor your Vessel in a safe Harbour; you have only then your Story to tell in your Mother Tongue to old Women and Apprentices; who will constantly supply the growing Stock of the Clergy with sufficient Matter for sermonizing, and be an everlasting Audience for Preachers to exercise their Lungs upon. For the Gentlemen of that Function have found, that a very elaborate Skill in Languages is not only useless, but very prejudicial to our most Holy Religion. For what is it that the profane Tribe of Grammmarians durst not undertake? What is it that they don't actually do? It is a common Thing with these pedantic Fellows, to weigh and turn every Syllable, Word, Sentence, and even the whole Scope of a Discourse; refusing to acquiesce in any particular Interpretation, tho' ever so approv'd and establish'd; crying out upon the Stupidity of others, and boasting of their own Penetration, by which they pretend to see so much better than the Ancients, and to have been the First in Discovering a new Signification of Words, They positively insist upon it, that in the Hebrew Bible, which incertae linguae monumento, plurima esse sine exemplo vocabula; hominum, animalium, herbarum, utensilium, & nescio quarum rerum appellationes obscurissimas, & nemini perspectas; nullum etiam inter ea, quorum ratio certior esse creditur, verbum esse aut locutionem, quae non probabili disputatione diversum quid significare possit, acriter contendunt. Omnes ad hujus sepultae & oblitteratae linguae intelligentiam aditus ita esse obstructos & impeditos, ut ipsi illi, qui Esra & primariis Synagogae antistitibus plus sapere videntur, interpretes, in Israëlitarum monumentis prae tenebris & caligine tactu potius quam sensu obversentur. Nihil ergo proderit ingenii ad coelestia evolutis vires puerili & inani occupatione deprimere, quae licet adfida & vehemens, numquam ad confessam & apertam verborum obscuriorum & sententiarum explanationem studiosum perducet. Clamet ergo, & contendat impia fere & sanctae linguae inimica Grammaticorum caterva, eadem via in tabulis divinis, & vatum voluminibus interpretandis esse incedendum, per quam in Homeri aut Virgilii verbis exponendis Grammatici discipulos suos producere consueverunt: & unicam verum, & qui scriptorum mentibus fuit obversatus, sensum eruendi superesse rationem, quae ex vera origine & vi verborum, linguae olim vigentis ingenio, & usitata loquendi consuetudine iuitur: omnia illa subsidia in hujus linguae meditatione deesse nemo infitiri potest. Aliam igitur & longe uberiores, simulque facillimam, divinae mentis explanationem aperiant & ostendant sacerdotum scholae, quae non ex Grammaticorum obscuris & controversis legibus, sed ex comparatione receptae persuasionis, & peraequa oraculorum proportionem, Dei & sacratorum voluminum mentem declarabunt. Ignorasse feliciter

which is
ta'n Lang which ar Herbs, U
and utter is not on pretend t lowable Thing fro contend t terated b
up, that t
of the Ma may be fa these Me that is ro Advantag
ring Vige which, b the Perso
tion of th the wick out and way oug expoundi
of comin his Lang Writing, very bod learning t discover the Divin and the l verted R
with the responder

which is the only remaining Relique of that doubtful uncertain Language, there are very many Words but once us'd, which are made to signify the Names of Men, Animals, Herbs, Utensils, and what not, tho' we are all in the dark, and utterly ignorant of the true Meaning; and that there is not one Word or Expression among those which we pretend to know better, which might not by a very allowable Criticism be made to signify quite a different Thing from what it is suppos'd to do at present. They contend that all the Avenues to the Knowledge of this obliterated buried Language, are so embarras'd and choak'd up, that those very Interpreters who seem to know more of the Matter than Esa, and the Elders of the Synagogue; may be said rather to grope their Way than see it among these Monuments of the Israelites; so thick is the Darkness that is round about them. It can never therefore be of Advantage to a Genius turn'd for Divinity to clog its aspiring Vigour with so empty and childish an Employment; which, be it ever so earnest and diligent, will never bring the Person that studies it to an allow'd and known Explanation of the more obscure Words and Sentences. Let then the wicked and unsanctified Crew of Grammarians cry out and contend as long as they please, that the same way ought to be follow'd in interpreting Scripture, as in expounding Homer and Virgil; and that the only Method of coming at the true Sense of an Author is to understand his Language in the full force it bore at the time of his Writing, and the manner of speaking then us'd; now every body must own that such Helps are not to be had in learning this Tongue. But the Divinity-Schools may open and discover to you a much fuller and easier way of explaining the Divine Will; which will declare the Meaning of God and the Holy Scriptures, not by the obscure and controverted Rules of the Grammarians, but from comparing it with the Church establish'd, and from the very exact correspondence of the Sacred Oracles themselves. They will tell ter Hebraeorum linguam prima Ecclesiae florētissimae secula, quibus sine ejus ope doctrinae certae dogmata fuere constituta, & repetitis Conciliis capita comprobatae religionis formulis numquam temerandis consignata. Nec magis instructos ab Israelitarum sermone fuisse Latinae Ecclesiae antistites, eosque nullo, aut exiguo cum Graecae linguae usu, acerrimos veritatis propugnatores existisse, & subsidio versae in vernaculum sermonem scripturae, diversa sentientes felicissime refutasse. Majus quoque & ardentius plebi & mulierculis injectum fuisse pietatis studium, cum neglecta sterili & sicca verborum & sententiarum interpretatione, communes & per vulgatae veritates ex quibuscumque divini codicis verbis confirmarentur. Videatur hoc prodigio simile omnibus, qui his mysteriis non sunt initiati; verum tamen exitu & rebus deprehenditur, Academicae juventutis & plebis doctores, sine exquisita linguarum intelligentia, expeditius & promptius tenebricosas sacrorum oraculorum obscuritates & aenigmata enodare, & ad causam suam trahere, quam qui omnem in excutendis & versandis antiqui sermonis reliquiis aetatem contriverunt. Sudent, laborent, fatigentur, ungues rodant, & caput scabant Grammaticorum Coryphaei, scriptis, quae ex antiquitate supersunt, perplexis & ambiguis impallescant & insenescant, Vobis, divinorum responsorum interpretes, nec modo veteranis, sed qui vix prima elementa didicerunt, tironibus, benignitatem numinis sentire datur, & gratias immortales agere licet, quod tam uberes, tam redundantes scriptis vatum suorum infuderit sensus, ut iis in omnes partes versatis, quidvis inde effici possit. Tentet modo Grammaticus novam & ante non intellectam loci alicujus controversi & vexati interpretationem, illico ut profano, & irreligioso tell you that the first Ages in which the Church flourish'd were happily ignorant of the Hebrew Tongue; and without the least Assistance from that, had the Sense of the true Doctrine settled for them, and the Fundamentals of the receiv'd Religion establish'd and authoriz'd by Councils and Articles, never to be infring'd. That the Fathers of the Latin Church, besides their want of Hebrew, with little or no knowledge of the Greek, became stout Champions for the Truth, and by the help of the Scripture translated into their Mother Tongue, happily confuted those that dissented from them. And that the Women and common People were more zealously and piously dispos'd, when, instead of a dry and barren Dissertation upon Words and Sentences, the most common and ordinary Truths were prov'd from almost any part of Scripture. This may be thought very strange by all those who have not been initiated into these Mysteries: but the Event fully shews that they, whose business it is to instruct our Academical Youth and teach the People, will unravel the obscure and knotty Points of the Sacred Writings, and make them serve their purpose more expeditiously and readily, than they who have spent all their Days in sifting and examining the remains of ancient Languages. Let the Chiefs among the Grammarians sweat, toil, and fatigue themselves, bite their Nails, and scratch their Heads, wax old and wan over the perplext and ambiguous Writings of Antiquity; To you, the Interpreters of the Divine Oracles, not only the old Veterans of you, but the young Tiro's who have scarce learnt their first Rudiments, it is granted to feel the Benignity of the Deity, and to render him eternal Thanks, for having infus'd into you such an abundant understanding of the Writings of his Prophets, as to be able to turn and twist them all manner of ways, and make them speak what Sense you please. Let but a Grammarian attempt a new Interpretation of any Place, tho' ever so controverted and perplex'd, he is immediately threatned ligioso dirae & execrationes intentantur. Vobis vero, sapientissimi Epoptae, multiplices & diversas ad minutissimas sacrati voluminis partes, & versus conjecturas, quamvis ad regulas puerilis artis non sint exactae, neque forte etiam scriptoris animo respondeant, si modo constitutae non adversentur religioni, cumulare fraudi esse nequit. O inexhaustum & numquam exarescentem interpretandi fontem & scatebram! quae ad finem rerum conjectorum ora irrigabit, & industriam praeconum felicissimo processione augmento acuet & excitabit. Facessat ergo omne sermonis prisci studium, & cum tanta diligentia & religione in domesticas divina oracula transierint linguas, ad eas addiscendas, ornandas, & augendas, tota mente incumbite, coelestis sapientiae candidati, & earum ministerio in novae semper & admirandae doctrinae thesauros vos insinuate; ita temporis, ita laboris, ita impensarum ingens compendium facietis.

Sed quid diutius exilis & molesta de vocabulis & dictionibus nos contentio moretur? ad res potius & facta adgrediamur, & quam difficile, quam inutile, quam calamitosum fundo divino sit historiarum studium, quod per veteris aevi memorias, & omnium populorum annales pervagetur, videamus.

Quicumque ex vero, non venditandae mercis gratia, de Historiarum scientia disputare instituet, certis quibusdam praeceptis viam futurae doctrinae praemunire debet. Nihil scilicet fide historica esse fallacius, nihil in rebus humanis incertius fateri non erubescat. Praemoneat nullum nobis, cuiuscumque

threatned
irreligiou Sacred
to start Text of cording
with the gainst th Fountain which v
End of t Preacher
then wit
and sinc religious selves w Heavenly proving into the Learning
Trouble,
But wh trifling p to down
useless, study of Memoir
very Na Whos
ledge of mercena
he inten
he shou thing is dit, not lay it do

threatned with Anathemas and Curses, as the most profane irreligious Wretch: But to you, ye wise Inspectors of the Sacred Mysteries, it can never be imputed as fraudulent to start a thousand different Conjectures upon one little Text of Scripture; no matter whether they are form'd according to the childish Rules of Criticism, or correspond with the Author's Meaning, provided they don't make against the Religion by Law establish'd. O this charming Fountain of Interpretation, ever flowing and never dry! which will moisten the Mouths of Conjecturers to the End of the World, and whet and sharpen the Industry of Preachers, by so happily promoting their Business. Away then with all concern and regard for the ancient Languages; and since the Divine Oracles have been so diligently and religiously translated into your own Tongues, apply your selves with all your might, you that are Candidates for this Heavenly Wisdom, to the learning, embellishing, and improving of these, and by their assistance work your Way into the Treasures of this always new and admirable Learning. Thus you will find a vast Return for the Time, Trouble, and Expence, that you have bestow'd upon it. But why should we any longer dwell upon this little trifling particular of Words and Phrases? let us rather come to downright Matter of Fact, and see how difficult, how useless, how destructive to the Interest of Religion, the study of History is; in that it makes Incursions into the Memoirs of Antiquity, and forages upon the Annals of every Nation.

Whoever would make a Dissertation upon the Knowledge of History with regard to Truth, and not for any mercenary End, ought to establish a Method of what he intends to teach by some fix'd Rules. For Example, he shou'd make no scruple of acknowledging that nothing is less to be depended upon than Historical Credit, nothing in the World more uncertain. He should lay it down as a necessary Caution beforehand, that we have

D

cumque seculi vel gentis, superesse scriptorem, cuius memoria non fuerit infirma, ingenium minime omnium doctrinarum capax, prudentia rerum civilium parum consummata. Quosdam amore patriae, aut sacrorum à majoribus traditorum veneratione, ablatos, nonnullos factionum studiis, aut credulitate à vero deductos. Multos famae & nominis cupiditate mirabilia magis, quam vera condidisse. Illos mercede conductos, hos animi & voluptatis causa splendide mentitos; non paucos regiae Majestatis turpissimos assentatores, Principum facinora & superbos dominantium mores heroicarum virtutum specie velasse; contra, libertatis & licentiae popularis patronos, prae immodico in reges odio, civitatum suarum fastos falsis laudationibus vitiasse. Judaeorum fabulas, Graecorum levitatem & mendacia, Romanorum in praedicanda pietate & justitia bellorum, & in dissimulandis omnibus, quae turpem Principi populo notam inurerent, infamem diligentiam; denique omnium nationum, aliis se priores & meliores jactantium, ambitionem numquam satis auditorum oculis & mentibus exponere & denuddare potest. Ita ut Historias qui docet & discit, ipsis illis, qui olim Pyrrhonis, aut nuper Cartesii scita probarunt, acrius contendere debeat, de singulis & universis, quae narrantur, factis esse addubitandum, donec certis & perspicuis indiciis se veritas producat. Ita imbutos & praeparatos adolescentium animos à primis humani generis conditoribus, per tenebrosam primum fabularum caliginem, deinde per ambiguas & dubias regnorum successiones, ad

have no
whose capable Govern
should out of Religion
Bigotry
ny, ou Posterit
than tru for the vile Flat ons and of hero vourers
their in cords o
can nev standing vity an
the Ro
Wars, Reproa
not for though and lea those v since o gular t tain an
to lead prepar Founde
ness of certain

have no Writer extant of any Time or Nation whatever, whose Memory was not infirm, his Genius by no means capable of all Kinds of Learning, and his Knowledge of Government and State Affairs far from compleat. He should own that some are snatch'd away from the Truth out of a Love to their Country, or a Veneration for the Religion of their Forefathers; some led astray by their Bigotry to a Party, or their too easy Credulity: That many, out of a Desire of making their Names famous to Posterity, have affected to give Relations rather wonderful than true: That these have lied gloriously for Pay, those for their Pleasure only: That not a few, who were vile Flatterers of crown'd Heads, have veil'd the base Actions and insolent Behaviour of Tyrants, under the Colour of heroic Virtues: And that, on the other side, the Favourers of Liberty and popular Licentiousness, out of their immoderate Aversion to Kings, have vitiated the Records of their States with undue Commendations. He can never sufficiently expose and lay open to the Understandings of his Scholars the Fables of the Jews, the Levity and Lies of the Greeks, the scandalous Affectation of the Romans in proclaiming the Piety and Justice of their Wars, and in concealing every thing that would bring any Reproach upon their own Nation; in short, he should not forget the Pains that all Countries have taken to be thought better of than others. So that he who teaches and learns History, ought to contend more earnestly than those who formerly follow'd the Opinions of Pyrrho, or since of Des Cartes, that one should doubt of all and singular the Facts mention'd, till the Truth appears by certain and clear Evidence. It is the Duty of these Masters to lead on the Minds of their Youth, thus season'd and prepar'd, by gentle cautious Steps down from the original Founders of Mankind; first of all thro' the thick Darkness of the fabulous Ages; after that, thro' the dubious uncertain Successions of Kingdoms, to Records more authen-ad liquidioris fidei monumenta suspensio & tanto gradu quidem deducere magistrorum sunt partes: verum non tantum in obscuris & incertis, sed in auctoritate multorum seculorum comprobatis factis haerere; ad singula, quae suspiciosa videri possunt, consistere; ad minimum quemque scrupulum offendere; & dubitandi occasionem injicere; quid, quaeso, aliud est, quam ubi in divinis annalibus, electae à Deo, & à gentibus segregatae nationis seriem evolvere incipient, praemonere simul, non certiore fide Israëliti populi, antiquissimi omnium, fata, quam reliquorum esse publicis literis mandata? Quid vero futurum, ubi Hebraeorum annales, quibus praecipua nobis est constituenda auctoritas, non semper cum peregrinorum fastis amice consentire audiverint? Ubi inextricabiles illi nodi de Assyriorum, Babyloniorum, Medorum & Persarum dominatione juvenum animos implicuerint? nihil jam disam de confusissima temporum doctrina, quae à quibusdam ad Hebraeorum, ab aliis ad Graecorum computationes exigitur, & tot spinis & sentibus est obsessa, ut si tota hominis vita in calculis ponendis & subducendis insumeretur, numquam ratio ad liquidum perducere, aut exitus ex labyrintho tam inexplicabili dari possit. His jam adde, quae non historiarum, sed in primis graviorum doctrinarum Professores publice praedicare solent; plurima ex praejudicatis opinionibus, non propriis, quibus artifices sua dogmata enunciare solent, verbis esse expressa; sed sermone populari, quo specie rerum decepta, aut superstitionibus obligata multitudo inter se conferre solet. Rerum naturalium causas, solis, & siderum cursus & motus, & similia, non ex decretis sapientum, sed ex incerta vulgi persuasione, & fallaci oculorum & sensuum fide saepe enarrari. De Deo, cujus vera vis & natura à nullo intellecta fuit, tic, and

to bog have p that ca tle Scr
What i divine
which tiles, bu ancient lity tha case, v
brews, corresp
those in Assyria
rais the the ve reckon
the Gr bushy whole
never c Labyri
History
culcate judicat
in a vu use, v blinded
the Me
mentio
Wife a Vulgar
we ha
yet un

tic, and of a clearer Credit. But then to instruct them to boggle, not only at obscure doubtful Facts, but such as have pass'd current for many Ages; to stop at every thing that carries the least Suspicion with it; to start at every little Scruple; and to give them occasion for doubting; What is this, I pray, when they come to turn over the divine Annals, and peruse the History of that Nation which was chosen by God, and separated from the Gentiles, but hinting that the Affairs of the Israelites, that most ancient People, have been recorded with no greater Fidelity than those of other Countries? But what will be the case, when they come to hear that the Annals of the Hebrews, upon which we lay so great a Stress, don't always correspond with the Records of other Nations? When those inextricable Knots concerning the Government of the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, and Persians come to embarrass the Minds of their young Scholars? Not to mention the very confus'd Account of Time, which by some is reckon'd according to the Hebrew, by others according to the Greek Computation; and is surrounded with such a bushy Thicket of Thorns and Briars, that if a Man's whole Life were to be spent in calculating of it, he could never clear the Point, or find a way out of so intricate a Labyrinth. Add to these, what not only the Professors of History, but of graver Matters more especially, use to inculcate; that many Things are express'd according to prejudicated Opinions, not in the proper Terms of Art, but in a vulgar way of speaking, such as the common People use, who are generally impos'd upon by Appearances, or blinded by Superstition: That the Causes of natural Things, the Motions of the Sun and Stars, and the like, are often mention'd, not according to the Determinations of the Wise and Learned, but after the erroneous Tenets of the Vulgar, and the deceitful Information of our Senses: That we have Ideas given us of God (tho' no Mortal could ever yet understand his true Nature and Quality) such as befuit, notiones humanis mentibus & corporibus similes informari; ejusque & administratorum, quorum etiam conditio & ingenium nulli est exploratum, praesentiam, licet veram & indubitatam, modo tamen nostrae menti non percipiendo ostendi. Praejudicare quidem illam & exemplum dare familiari Daemonum inter homines obambulationi, nihilque obesse, quo minus, imperante Deo, impuri illi spiritus se in cognitiones nostras insinuent; incredibile tamen morosis naturae interpretibus accidere videmus, damnatis ad aeternas tenebras & carceres Dei & hominum hostibus, majorem saepe vim & licentiam humanis actibus interveniendi, quam beatis & laetabili Dei luce & adspectu fruuntibus Geniis, concessam. Quidquid vero de eo inter sapientiae humanae Professores disceptetur, hoc inter omnes, qui antiqua & nova rerum gestarum monumenta tractant, constare, omnes historicos, ubi de Daemonibus, prodigiis, ominibus & portentis, quae timidae plebis animos concutere solent, sententiam ferunt, per veritatis certae ignoracionem in maxima opinionum inconstantia versari. Acutiores, & quibus res, aliis temere creditae, semper suspiciosae videntur, Daemonum species, larvas & nocturnas umbras, manes ex inferis excitatos, Magorum conjecturas, somniorum interpretamenta, inter plebis deliria & aniles fabulas referre; obtusioris vero ingenii, qui omnia fieri posse facile & pie credunt, quibus nec licet, nec vacat unamquamque rem examinare, non dubitare, quin Daemones, eorumque administri, Magi, augures, conjectores, haruspices, & sacrificuli futura, ita volente Deo, habeant exploratissima; horumque omnium expressissima nobis in divinis paginis exstent vestigia. Somnia interpretandi disciplinam, si non perfectam & certissimam, ali-

long to
of Him Quality
able, is Reason
a Prece
Men ;
these im
finuate
it happ Interpre
Man, de be allow humane blissful soever in this and mo when Signs a Throng
inconfi sharp-si questior
they sp
from th mentior Taes : B
who ea
who h
every P their u tellers, certainl
that the press Pa

long to human Minds and Bodies : And that the Presence of Him and his ministring Spirits (whose Condition and Quality we know as little of) tho' real and unquestionable, is exhibited in a way not to be comprehended by our Reason : That this is laid down as a Postulatum, and made a Precedent for the familiar Intercourse of Dæmons among Men ; and that there is no Cause or Impediment why these impure Spirits may not, by God's Appointment, insinuate and work themselves into our Hearts. And yet it happens to pass for an incredible Thing with the surly Interpreters of Nature, that these Enemies of God and Man, doom'd to eternal Chains and Darknes, should often be allow'd a greater Power and Liberty of intermeddling in humane Affairs than the happy Angels, who enjoy the blisful Light and Presence of God. But that, how much soever the Professors of humane Wisdom may be Sceptics in this Matter, every one that is vers'd in the ancient and modern Chronicles must allow, that all Historians when they give their Opinions of Dæmons, Prodigies, Signs and Wonders, such as use to amaze the timorous Throng, out of Ignorance of the real Truth, are very inconsistent in their Notions about them : That the more sharp-sighted among them, and such as are always apt to question what others as rashly take upon Trust, whenever they speak of Devils, Ghosts and Goblins, Spirits rais'd from the Dead, Art Magic, and Interpretation of Dreams, mention them as Fancies of the People only and old Wives Tales : But that those who are not Men of such Penetration, who easily and piously believe that all Things are possible, who have neither Leisure nor Opportunity for examining every Particular, make no question but that Dæmons and their under Officers, Magicians, Soothsayers, Fortune-tellers, Wizards and Juglers, by God's blessed Will, can certainly foretel what will come to pass hereafter : And that there are Instances of every thing of this Kind in express Passages of holy Writ : That the Art of interpreting aliquam tamen fuisse. Auspicioꝝ usu quidem interdictum populo Israëlitico, non vanam tamen eorum fidem & auctoritatem diversis gentibus, adjuvante superstitionem Daemone, nec intercedente Deo, fuisse. Functas vita animas ope Daemonum cieri & evocari posse, Samuelis ab inferis excitati exemplo manifesto constare. Quae omnia infirmare & irridere, quid, quaeso, aliud, quam adjuvare impiorum de sacri voluminis certa auctoritate, & scriptoꝝ sinceritate & fide, suspiciones? Haec fraudibus sagarum, vel civili sollertiae adtribuere, quid aliud, quam per ingenii liberioris, & nulli magistrorum addicti, causam, se justo alieniorem à fabulosis narrationibus ostendere? quid aliud, quam inscitiam, temeritatem, impudentiam, & in novas opiniones, earumque auctores proclivem propensionem prodere, nec modo profanis, sed divinis historiis fidem abrogare; non argumentis pervulgatas opiniones refutare, sed ipsam omnino religionem ex animis hominum delere? Quid aliud, quam verae religionis propugnatoribus omnia arma & tela eripere, quibus regnum illud vastissimum Daemonum & ejus satellitum evertere fortissimi athletae consueverunt? Cui bono & usui perplexa illa & ambigua oraculorum veterum responsa astutiae & avaritiae sacerdotum adsignare, & principem Daemonum de throno, quem, Deo permittente, posuit, deturbare? Nonne hoc est per infelicis tenebrarum principis latus Deum sauciare, & dum praedictiones Pythiarum & conjecturas Chaldaeorum & hariolorum impugnare se simulant, omnem divinarum vaticinationum vim & veracitatem infirmare? O in-
Dreams

Dreams
tain an
forbide ance of the Com
small C
the Ex
the De be distu Now
what is of imp holy B
To attr Policy, thinkin
counts
rance, new-fa invalida but of rors, b
What i
gion of doughty Empire
or Adv
ous Re
Avarice
Devils
has foun
of the
the Tru
they pr Conject

Dreams was in some Measure known, if not very certain and perfect : That the People of Israel indeed were forbidden the use of Divination ; but that, by the Assistance of the Devil, who encourag'd this Superstition, and the Connivance of God who permitted it, it was of no small Credit and Authority among other Nations : That the Example of Samuel, who was call'd up from the Dead, is a manifest Proof that Souls departed may be disturb'd and rais'd again by the Power of the Devil. Now to go to invalidate and ridicule all these Things, what is it else, I pray, but to aid and abet the Scepticisms of impious Wretches in relation to the Authority of the holy Bible, and the Truth and Veracity of Scripture ? To attribute all this to the Imposture of Witches or State Policy, what is it else, but, under a Pretence of Free-thinking, to shew one's self more averse to fabulous Accounts than is decent ? What, but to betray one's Ignorance, Rashness, Impudence, and a strong Propensity to new-fangled Opinions, and the Broachers of them, and invalidating the Testimony not only of profane History, but of sacred also ; not merely arguing against vulgar Errors, but also blotting out all Religion from Men's Minds ? What is it but disarming the Defenders of the true Religion of all that Artillery and Ammunition with which the doughty Champions are wont to overthrow the wide vast Empire of the Devil and all his Adherents ? Of what Use or Advantage can it be to attribute those intricate ambiguous Responses of the ancient Oracles to the Craft and Avarice of Priests ; and to tumble the Prince of the Devils from that Throne which, by God's Permission, he has founded ? Is not this wounding God thro' the Sides of the unfortunate Prince of Darkness ? and weakening the Truth and Efficacy of the divine Prophecies, while they pretend to attack the Predictions of Sibyls, and the Conjectures of Gypsies and Fortune-tellers ? O intolerable tolerandam omnia infirmendi libidinem! O perniciosam & exempli metuendi confidentiam! permitti forte in dijudicandis Graecorum & Romanorum ambitiosis narrationibus superbum fastidium posset, sed easdem de annalibus sacris suspiciones juvenum mentibus injicere, impium & execrandum. Nec tamen his finibus omnem historiarum veterum fidem evertentium temeritas consistit; sed quum odii publici & Eumolpidarum saepe metus sacrorum scriptorum obtrectatores cohibeat, omnem impetum vertunt in venerandos historiae Ecclesiasticae conditores, qui coetuum Christianorum dissidia & contentiones de doctrinae capitibus literis mandarunt. Non solum illis comparare gentium impiarum & externarum historicos, sed ideo fere praeferre solent, quia ferociores & infestis magis animis bestias concurrisse, quam Christianos negant, & nullo discrimine aetatis, dignitatis, aut doctrinae, in consortes sine exemplo saeviisse narrant. Annalibus vero Christianis fidem detrahunt, quia integerrimorum famam calumniis & mendaciis deformasse, & memoriam posteritati detestandam reliquisse; nequissimorum vero, sed qui vultu rigido & habitu acquisito sanctitatem mentiri didicerant, scelera & importunitates non modo dissimulasse, sed ipsos fallaciarum & scelerum architectos amplissimis laudibus elatos, coelo & Divorum ordinibus adscripsisse, se probare posse arbitrantur. Praeterea in vulgus spargere non erubescunt, sub infami impietatis & haereseos, ut vocare solent, crimine, omnes, qui sacerdotum dominationi succedere, eorumque ambitionem, crudelitatem, & avaritiam adjuvare nollent, obruisse. Reges & principes, omni laude & admiratione praedicandos, ut monstra, & à Deo generi humano & ecclesiae pestes immissas, depinxisse; quia Episcoporum

Itch

Itch of d
dangerous
Such a
criticizin and Rom Heads co
ble. Nor Credit o
from qu
and the ble Com
the Qua
of Chris &trin.
with the
to prese Brutes e have do cruel to their Ag peach t
think t tation nies an rity; b Exorbit
to coun
Look,
comiun
Besides
these H
of Her
ranny c elty an mentio
present

Itch of desiring to invalidate every thing! O Presumption, dangerous in it self, and to be dreaded in its Example! Such a squeamish Niceness might perhaps be allow'd in criticizing upon the ambitious Performances of the Greeks and Romans, but to put such Suspicions into young Men's Heads concerning the sacred Annals, is impious and execrable. Nor does the Boldness of those who subvert the whole Credit of ancient History stop here; but being deterr'd from questioning the sacred Writings for Fear of the Mob and the Clergy, they vent all their Rage upon the venerable Compilers of Ecclesiastical History, who have recorded the Quarrels and Contentions of the several Assemblies of Christians concerning the Fundamentals of their Doctrine. They are wont not only to set them upon a Level with the Historians of other infidel Nations, but generally to prefer these before them, for averring that no savage Brutes ever treated one another worse than the Christians have done; declaring that they were beyond Example cruel to their Fellow-Christians, without any Regard to their Age, Dignity, or Learning. And then they impeach the Credit of the Christian Annals, because they think they can prove that they have blacken'd the Reputation of Men of the greatest Integrity with Calumnies and Lies, and left their Memory detestable to Posterity; but that they not only have conceal'd the Vices and Exorbitances of the worst of Men, who indeed had learnt to counterfeit Religion, and put on a sanctified Mein and Look, but even sainted and extoll'd with the highest Encomiums the very Contrivers of Cheats and Villanies. Besides, they make no Scruple of saying publickly that these Histories have laid all under the infamous Imputation of Heresy and Impiety, who refus'd to submit to the Tyranny of the Clergy, and patronize their Ambition, Cruelty and Avarice: That Kings and Princes, never to be mention'd without Praise and Admiration, have been represented by them as Monsters and Plagues, let loose by God

coporum & Monachorum cupiditati modum imponere sunt ausi. Parricidas vero, adulteros, gulae & ventris mancipia, qui leges divinas & humanas conculcarunt, ut exempla pietatis & omnium virtutum proposuissent, & immensis praeconiis ornasse, quia, oppressa populi libertate, & cohibita diversum sentiendi libidine, vittatum ordinem divitiis & honoribus auxerunt, aedes sacras, & nebulonum re-ceptacula regis vectigalibus instruxerunt. Quo non dolore commoveri, qua non indignatione irritabiles quidem piorum animos, sed ardore in Dei & ecclesiae causam inflammatos, effervesce censetis, ubi quidquid miri, aut inauditi à Tertulliano, Eusebio, Orosio, Sulpicio, & nescio quibus, acerrimo propug-nandae veritatis studio incensus viris, memoratur, irrideri & ludibrio profanis esse ingemiscunt? Quis patienter ferat, tot veritatis testes, qui tyrannorum in inermem gregem saevientium crudelitatem fatigarunt, vel mente motis adnumerari, vel ex fastis ecclesiae deleri? Quis Tiberii consecrandi Christum conatus, quis Hadriani templa Servatori excitandi propositum, quis Philippi Christianam religionem profitentis pietatem, quis Fulminatricis legionis apud Deum potentiam, Thebaeae constantiam & pertinaciam, belle confectis fabulis accenseri non irascatur? Quis Constantini, non tam religionis in-stauratoris, quam Senatus insulati locupletatoris, ambitiosam perfidiam, dissimulationem, parricida-lem furorem, & omnia, quibus pessimi tyranni in odia hominum incurrerunt, facinora in fraudem rei Christianae exquisitis illos maledictis insectari; Juliani

God u were f
 and Bi Glutton
 Divine
 Piety, gyrics,
 perfect
 ligation,
 the Cle certain
 pious g Indigna Church
 they re tion'd l
 rest of Truth,
 these p see so Cruelty
 Flock, sentene
 be angr seccrated
 vator,
 the Pre
 the Fir upon as ching t a Supp
 nate;
 Cause,
 quihre
 crisy, C Actions

God upon Mankind and the Church, only because they were so bold as to set Bounds to the Greediness of Monks and Bishops: But that Parricides, Adulterers, Slaves to Gluttony and Drunkenness, who trampled upon all Laws Divine and Humane, have been propos'd for Examples of Piety, and all Virtues, and embellish'd with mighty Panegyrics, because they oppress'd their People's Liberty, and persecuted those who were of a different Opinion in Religion, in order to augment the Honours and Revenues of the Clergy, and royally to endow Religious Houses to entertain a parcel of idle Knaves. With what Grief must pious good Souls be touch'd, with what Rage must their Indignation, their Zeal for the Cause of God and the Church boil up and inflame them, when with bitter Groans they reflect that every miraculous unparallel'd Incident mention'd by Tertullian, Eusebius, Orosius, Sulpicius, and the rest of those warm Men who stickled so heartily for the Truth, is turn'd into Ridicule, and made a Jest of by these profane Wretches? Who can with Patience bear to see so many Witnesses for the Truth, who baffled the Cruelty of Tyrants furiously bent against the harmless Flock, either reckon'd among the Class of Madmen, or senten'd to be expell'd the Calendar? Who can chuse but be angry, to have Tiberius his Attempt to get Christ consecrated, Adrian's Design of building Temples to the Servator, Philip's Piety in professing the Christian Religion, the Prevalence of the Thundring Legion with God, and the Firmness and Constancy of the Thebans, all look'd upon as no better than Romances? Who can help stomaching that Constantine shou'd be represented not so much a Supporter of Religion as an Enricher of the mitred Senate; and that, to the great Detriment of the Christian Cause, he should be inveigh'd against with the most exquisite Reproaches for his ambitious Treachery, Hypocrisy, Cruelty as a Parricide, and guilty of all those vile Actions which have rendred the worst of Tyrants odious Juliani vero, transfugae & desertoris, eruditionem, clementiam, frugalitatem, patientiam, fortitudinem, castimoniam, & omnes, quibus umquam laudari meruit princeps, virtutes in coelum extollere non stomachetur? Sed quis non exsecratur Historiarum Professores, qui ipsos Romanae urbis Episcopos, sacrilegos illos Pontifices, & juratos Dei & Christi hostes & adversarios, non modo atrocissimorum criminum, quibus eos purior Christianorum pars reos peregit, absolvere, magicarum artium infamiam ipsis detrabere, & pacti cum Daemone inivitiam irridere; sed, quod horrendum! ipsam ex Pontificalibus fastis feminam, & parturientem Papam eradere non erubescunt? Quid est si haec non praevaricatio, & causam emendatae religionis adversariis prodere? Sed resisto; metuo enim, si ad propiora nobis tempora series me abriperet, ne insanientes illi veritatis, ut se vocant, adsertores & fabularum expulsores me vehementius conturbarent; & tot non modo incredibilia, sed aperte falsa & ficta, quibus aliter sentientium nomina sunt infamata, etiam hodie tradi occlamarent; & tanto factionum studio nostrorum etiam temporum Praesules saepe exardescere ostenderent, ut ipsi, qui conventibus eorum interfuerunt, posthac nec oculis nec auribus credendum, nihilque de rebus, quae inter diversarum partium praesides & antisites geruntur, certi & indubitati prodi, me cogerent fateri. Cavete ergo, sanctissimae doctrinae studiosi, ne obstinata illa, nulli, nisi sub certo & jurato teste, credendi pertinacia & labes, quae jam omnes Historicorum scholas infecit, longius serpat; sed ad vitae securitatem, ad religionis custodiam, ad pietatis incrementum, & in primis ad partes firmandas, & ad sacri ordinis venerationem attinere

to Ma
 state, Cleme
 the Vi
 for? I Histor
 of Rom mics a horrid charg'd
 Magic,
 pact w
 out of great B ing the
 But her
 Thred
 that th themfel
 a more many i and inv jure th different Days o
 they wh
 me to o Eyes an
 true Re Dignitar
 that inte fection
 by a sw all the esteem i Safety o

to Mankind: And that Julian, a vile Renegado and Apostate, should be cried up to the Skies for his Learning; Clemency, Frugality, Patience, Fortitude, Chastity, and all the Virtues that ever Prince deserved to be commended for? But who can forbear cursing those Professors of History, who make no scruple of acquitting the Bishops of Rome, those villanous High-Priests, the sworn Enemies and Adversaries of God and Christ, not only of the horrid Crimes with which the purer part of Christians has charg'd them, but clear them of the Scandal of dealing in Magic, laugh at the conceit of their entering into a Compact with the Devil; and, what is even shocking, strike out of the Catalogue of Pontiffs the Lady Pope with her great Belly? What is foul Play, if this be not, and betraying the Interest of the Reform'd Religion to it's Enemies? But here I stop; for I am afraid, if I should pursue my Thred down to those Times which are nearer our own, that these mad Advocates for Truth (as they affect to call themselves) and Exploders of Fables, would put me into a more violent Commotion; and cry out that not only as many incredible Things, but such as are manifestly false and invented, are even at this very Time given out to injure the good Name of those who happen to be of a different Opinion: and would shew that the Bishops of our Days often blaze out with such a Spirit of Faction, that they who have been present at their Debates would oblige me to own that henceforward we must not believe our Eyes and Ears, and that there is never any certain and true Report made of what passes between Prelates and Dignitaries of different Parties. Take care therefore, you that intend to study Divinity, that this obstinate and infectious Distemper of believing nothing but what is prov'd by a sworn and certain Evidence, which has already seiz'd all the Schools of the Historians, creep no farther; but esteem it to be for the Quiet and Security of Life, for the Safety of Religion, the Increase of Piety, and above all for nere putate, nullam scriptoribus sacratis & ecclesiasticis fidem aut auctoritatem denegare. Immo vero, cum illi ipsi, qui Historiarum studia tanto opere & molimine commendant, unicam ex illis utilitatem & fructum redire fateantur, ut Historia sit quasi vitae magistra, quae fugienda & facienda doceat: quid, quaeso, religionis interesse poterit, verane an incerta prodiderint nobis annalium conditores: cum sufficere virtutum praeconibus & vitiorum dissuasoribus debeat, si ita fieri potuisse ostendant. Eadem enim ex fabulis & commentitiis narrationibus, quae ex indubitatae fidei monumentis utilitatis redundabit. Majori quoque ardore in pietatis, sanctitatis, liberalitatis, & misericordiae studia exarsisse olim homines constat, quam nunc, ubi tam anxie in vulgo credita inquiritur, & quondam pia fraude & religioso dolo pleraque conficta esse apparet. Denique quid refert ex vetustate obsoletis voluminibus exempla virtutum & scelerum repetere, cum sacris oratoribus ingentes diligentissimorum virorum thesauri hodie ad manum sint, qui undique flores carpservunt, & tantam ex veteris & recentioris aevi scriptoribus materiam & silvam congesseunt, ut inde populo pro concione in longissimum tempus satisfieri; & animi vulgares ad virtutes imitandas, vel flagitia vitanda incendi possint.

Profligata jam levi illa & incredula Historicorum turba, quam facili manu ventosae eloquentiae, & garrulae loquacitatis patronos dispergam & dissipabo? Quae non tela contra lubricae & volubilis linguae jaculatores ex ipso sacri Codicis armamentario depromere, quibus à templis & sacris eos repellam, liceret? Sed, si non ipse doctrinae salutiferae Conditor, & apertissimi ejus Comites & se-

Etac

the str
neratio Defere
And fi
comm
only a were and w
to Rel
mitted Virtue
if they pened contriv doubte
burnt Holines
such n nerally been f Tricks
of goo
quity,
hand f gather'd
and Ma
may su and ex
or the Havi
storians loquenc may I
Sacred
to beat Territo
the Aut

the strengthening of your own Interest, and raising a Veneration to your Holy Order, never to refuse paying all Deference and Belief to the Sacred Ecclesiastical Writers. And since these very People who take such pains to recommend the Study of History, do acknowledge that the only advantage to be reap'd by it is, that History is as it were the Mistress of Life, teaching us what to follow and what to avoid, pray how can it be of any Consequence to Religion, whether the Compilers of Annals have transmitted to us Truth or not? Since they, who preach up Virtue and dissuade from Vice, may be very well satisfied, if they can shew that Things might possibly have so happened: For the very same Benefit may be had from Fables and contriv'd Stories, as from Monuments of the most undoubted Credit. And it is manifest that Men formerly burnt with a greater Zeal in their endeavours after Piety, Holiness, Liberality and Mercy, than they do now; when such nice Inquiries are made into the Things that are generally believ'd, and many of them made appear to have been formerly contriv'd by pious Frauds and religious Tricks. In fine, What does it signifie to fetch Examples of good or bad Actions from the musty Records of Antiquity, since our reverend Preachers may be supplied at hand from the Treasures of very diligent Men, who have gather'd Flowers from all Parts, and laid up such a Store and Magazin from both Ancient and Modern Writers, as may supply the People with Sermons a long long time, and excite all mean Capacities to the Imitation of Virtue, or the shunning of Vice?

Having thus routed the sorry unbelieving Crew of Historians, how easily shall I scatter the Patrons of empty Eloquence and loquacious Talk? What variety of Weapons may I not furnish my self with, from the Armory of the Sacred Volume, against the Shooters of idle and bitter Words, to beat them off from our Temples, and even out of the Territories of the Church? But, if it could be suppos'd, that the Author of our Salvation, and his honest plain Companions

Haec Antistites, populares, & ab omni furo nudos sermones nobis prodidissent, ipsa religionis simplicitas & sanctimonia, satis in doctrina sua ad persuadendum facultatis, satis in argumentis ad conciliandos animos gratiae, satis ad agendum splendoris se adferre posse admoneret. Quid juvat, inani verborum apparatu sacra aperta nec recondita involvere? quid lenociniis linguae ad mysteria populo & vulgo jam reclusa auditores adlectare, quos ipsa Dei vis, & efficax doctrinae potentia trahit & impellit? Quid Eloquentiae & Rhetorum praeceptis divinos oratores enervare, quibus coelestis in dicendo ardor robur addit, & demissus ex alto spiritus inflammat? Natura, aliis noverca, huic ordini benigna mater, jam nascentibus eloquentiam induit, & absque ulla exercitatione, modo loqui incipiant, disertos esse jubet. Quae insania, quis furor, destinatam divino praeconio juventutem, profanis dicendi magistris formandam tradere? qui tam arduum, tam longum eloquentiae studium esse mentiuntur, ut vix toti seculo unus eloquens evenerit; neque ex omni temporum memoria praeter tres quatuorve summa dicendi laude florentes, proferre possint, cum tamen unusquisque eorum se optimum esse oratorem sibi persuadeat. Quam absurdum, quam absurdum ergo desperatae illorum judicio laudis gloriam consecrari, & hoc Academicum spatium (quod tam laudabili celeritate tribus, summum quatuor, annis decurritur) inutili labore ideo interrumpere, ut ne mediocres quidem, aut tolerabiles oratores censoribus acerbissimis judicentur?

clament,

the Apo
guage, su manne might in Doctrin
actuate wrap an Words? procure have bee ple, wh Doctrin
Divine
when th
ly Zeal, from abo der of
with Elo Practice, Folly the Youth,
Lay-Ma
same tim cult, and comes to whole co have been every one a better th
to labour these Pec Course of somerly ru Endeavou
will not a lerable O

the Apostles, had not always express'd themselves in a Language suited to the Capacities of the Vulgar, and free from all manner of Art, the very Simplicity and Sanctity of Religion might inform us, that it is of it self sufficient to persuade by it's Doctrine, to convince by the force of its Arguments, and to actuate by its Light and Efficacy. Of what Use can it be to wrap and fold up a revealed Religion in an idle dress of Words? to employ the Tongue in so mean an Office as to procure an Audience to hear Mysteries explain'd; when they have been long since discover'd to the meanest of the People, whom the very Power of God, and the Energy of the Doctrine attract and impel? Why should we enervate our Divine Orators with Rules of Eloquence and Rhetoric, when they are strengthen'd in their preaching by a Heavenly Zeal, and inflam'd by the Spirit sent down upon them from above? Nature, a Stepmother to others, is to this Order of Men a kind indulgent Parent: she cloaths them with Eloquence as soon as they are born, and without any Practice, let them but speak and they are Orators. What Folly therefore, what Madness is it to put those of our Youth, design'd for the Pulpit, into the Hands of profane Lay-Masters to learn the Art of Speaking? who at the same time pretend that the study of Eloquence is so difficult, and will take up so much Time, that scarce one comes to perfection in an Age: Nor can they in the whole course of Time produce above three or four who have been celebrated for most accomplish'd Orators, tho' every one of them persuades himself that there never was a better than He. How absurd therefore and ridiculous is it, to labour in the Pursuit of a Reputation (in the opinion of these People) so impossible to be obtain'd, to break the Course of their Academical Studies (which they may so handsomely run thro' in three, or at most four Years) for a fruitless Endeavour; which, when they have done, the cruel Critics will not allow them to be indifferent, or so much as tolerable Orators? Let the hoarse Hawkers of Eloquence bawl

clament, quantum velint, ranci facundiae institores, ineptum esse & inconcinnum, omnem vitam publicis concionibus destinare, neque umquam dicendi leges percepisse: opponant nobis artificum exempla, quorum nemo in collegia artes profitentium, nisi tyrocinii rudimentis depositis, recipitur. Sacrae eloquentiae candidatis hoc praecipui natura, quid dico naturam? divina largitur benignitas, ut quoties velint, eloquentiam incredibilem exserere, & neglectis vanissimae doctrinae praeceptis, non tantum plebi admirabiles, sed regibus & magistratibus terribiles oratores evadere possint. Quoties non, agitante illo, qui intus est, Spiritu eorum corda & pectora incallescere, brachia jactari, manus complodi, pulpita feriri, capita rotari, spumas in ore agi, oculos ardere, corpus & membra contorqueri, & vultus in omnes formas variari sacro cum horrore stupemus? quis non erectis auribus in compositos ad dicendum praecones oculos intendit, & rigido primum vultu lacunaria intuentes, & è coelo sermonem evocantes, aut clausis oculis totos in se descendentes, veneratur? mox robustissima voce templa spatiosissima implere, modo teneram & flexibilem, & in quodcumque torqueant, sequacem frangere & modulari: nunc palato molliter illidere, interdum ranciduli quid balba de nare tenuare: aliquando flebili suavitate plorabile quid eliquare: nonnunquam jucundo & amabili sono aures mulcere: saepius vero lentissima vocis exilioris productione se in animos insinuare, obstupescit? Quis mentis suae compos, & non simul cum pullato grege attonari se sentit, ubi vario clamore, cantu, fletu, bawl out

culous to without bring A free of the Tim
I say Na
didates f
please th out Re selves in ment of Magistr
Horror, inward
the Pul
at the Limbs
into all Eyes an
to speak when v as if he when l
to the ly, wh rious I twistin prettily an affe languis Ears of most c with and he Robe,

bawl out as long as they please, that it is absurd and ridiculous to devote one's whole Life to haranguing in Public, without understanding the Rules of Oratory; let them bring Artizans for Examples, none of whom are made free of their respective Companies, till they have serv'd the Time of their Apprenticeships: Nature, but why do I say Nature? the Divine Benignity confers upon the Candidates for the Gown this Privilege, that as often as they please they can put forth incredible Eloquence, and, without Regard to the Rules of that vain Art, acquit themselves in the capacity of Orators, not only to the Amazement of the People, but often to the Terror of Kings and Magistrates. Can we, without being struck with Sacred Horror, behold how, when their Breasts are inspir'd with inward Zeal and Warmth, they brandish their Arms, cuff the Pulpit-Cushion with their Fists, wag their Heads, foam at the Mouth, look fierce with their Eyes, writhe their Limbs and whole Body to and fro, and vary their Features into all manner of Shapes? Who can forbear attending with Eyes and Ears to a Preacher, when first he composes himself to speak? Who can behold him without great Veneration, when with an earnest Look he rivets his Eyes to the Cieling, as if he look'd for a supply of Words from Heaven; or when he shuts them up close, and retires for Information to the Cabinet Council of his own Breast? Then presently, who can without Astonishment hear him fill the spacious Dome with his strong Voice; sometimes mincing and twisting his pliable Tone to suit his present Purpose; now prettily lispng and breaking his Words; now squeezing an affectionate Treble thro' his Nose; one while, sweetly languishing out a doleful Period; then again tickling the Ears of his Audience, with a pleasant merry Strain; but most commonly insinuating himself into their Affections with a long pathetic Whine? Who can keep his Senses and help sympathizing with the Gentlemen of the black Robe, when he finds himself mov'd according to their disfletu, risu, gemitu, tussitu, sereatu, se turbari, & in omnes, quas vult Orator, partes versari experitur? Naturalia haec, vel ut verius dicam, coelestia eloquentiae dona, non fictore vultus aut membrorum, non praeceunte Phœnisco adsimulata, sed sua sponte nata & usu aucta, aliam dignitatem ecclesiasticae cathedrae, & religioni auctoritatem conciliant, quam compositi illi ad exempla & dictata Histrionum motus & conformationes membrorum. Excitant & inflamment actionum mollitia effusas in omni intemperantia libidines in scena Mimi: teneras etiam puerorum, & virginum mentes ad turpium amorum meditationem motibus Ionicis incendunt saltatores; numerosa & effeminata oratione adolescentes corrumpant Academici declamatores: arguta & veteratoria loquacitate in perniciem clientium, & ad pervertendos iudicum animos armentur cassarum patroni; vos, coelestis eloquii potentissimi oratores, nudam & à Deo commodatam eloquentiam ad hominum salutem conservandam, & nefariorum impetus refutandos, sine alicujus invidia exercete.

Quam gravia A. quam funesta ex Linguarum, Historiarum & Eloquentiae meditatione in sacram doctrinam redundant incommoda, audivistis; sed omnia haec ludus & jocus videbuntur, prae letalibus, quae detestanda religioni Critica vulnera imponere non veretur. Haec tyrannidem adfectans, superbissimam sibi adrogat censuram, & tribunal insolenter erigit, ad quod omnes, qui ex tristi literarum naufragio & ruina, vel integri vel dilacerati evaserunt, scriptores, quasi nihil passi essent, oborto collo rapiuntur. Ausu profano, nullo delictu, importuna haec dominatrix, injecta sacris manna omnia temerat, & polluit. Nec vindictis adfertorum, different To ling, sighin ried which to speak n form'd by being of a procure to spect, from Body do, ample of their immo ner of loo don Airs i to the tend ty Orators nious Eloc vided with doing of Judges; Y

quence, u ple Speech
tion of Ma

You ha
what dep Divinity
loquence:
of those Critic giv Tyrant, v Censuring Authors,
the miser
not suffer the Colla
fied Imp
without

different Tones, either by their canting, lamenting, chuckling, sighing, coughing, hawking and spitting, and carried which way the Preacher pleases? These natural, or to speak more truly, Heavenly Gifts of Eloquence, not form'd by any Master of Gesture or Pronunciation, but being of a spontaneous Birth; and improv'd by Practice, procure to the Pulpit and Religion a very different Respect, from what those Motions and Regulations of the Body do, which are model'd after the Method and Example of Stage-players. Let those Jack-puddings with their immodest way of acting, provoke and raise all manner of loose Desires: Let the Dancers with their Rigadon Airs instill luscious beastly Sentiments of Love into the tender Hearts of Boys and Girls; Let the University Orators corrupt our Youth with their unmanly harmonious Eloquence; Let those that follow the Law be provided with a sharp crafty method of Pleading, to the undoing of their Clients, and misleading the Minds of the Judges; You, most powerful Utterers of Heavenly Eloquence, unenvied by all, practise and pursue that plain simple Speech convey'd to you from God, to guard the Salvation of Mankind and baffle the Attempts of the Wicked.

You have heard, Gentlemen Academics, what grievous, what deplorable Inconveniences attend the Profession of Divinity from the studying of Languages, History and Eloquence: Yet all this will seem but a Jest, in comparison of those deadly Wounds which the detestable Science of Critic gives to Religion. This Art, affecting to play the Tyrant, with much Pride assumes to it self the Right of Censuring, and insolently erects a Tribunal to which all Authors, who have escap'd either whole or shatter'd from the miserable Wreck and Desolation of Time, as if they had not suffer'd enough already, are violently dragg'd along by the Collar. This troublesome Termagant, with unsanctified Impudence, lays her Hand upon the holiest Things, without exception, defiling and profaning all she touches.

Nor

sertorum, nec Pontificum aut Conciliorum decretis, nec praejudicatis Principum aut Magistratum sententiis cobideri potest, quin, prioris status controversia omnibus mota, hunc peregrinitatis reum agat, huic, ut dubio parente edito, natales ambiguos faciat, illi, licet patrem adsignet, formam tamen & habitum fucis & mendis inquinatum esse calumniatur. Denique omnes, quotquot supersunt, libros corruptos, deformatos, & interpolatos causando, pro libidine sua addendo, delendo, emendando ita vexat & excarnificat, ut si ab inferis emergent auctores, foetus suos non agnoscerent. Per vos A. me non dicente, cernitis, quam exitiosum hoc sacris codicibus sit opus censorium. Quid enim? doctus Criticus & adsuetus urere & secare, inclementer omnis generis libros tractare, apices, syllabas, voces, dictiones confodere & stilo exigere, continebitne ille ab integro, & ante hanc haereseos natam intaminato, divinae sapientiae monumento crudeles ungues? O animadvertendam audaciam! O suppliciis aeternis constringendam perditorum hominum temeritatem? Tune, confidentissime alieni operis vexator, divina Moysis & vatum, inspirante Deo verba & sententias scripta, & invigilante ejus integritati diligentissimo Pontificum collegio, conservata monumenta, eodem mentis habitu, eadem arrogantia, qua Herodoti, qua Livii aut Taciti pulverulentos & exesos codices versabis? Tu, eodem fato omnes premente libros, vilissimas librorum operas, quae Graecorum & Latinorum volumina, lucri studio properata, venalia proponebant, sacris Scribis, quorum manus & calamos non mi-

Nor ca
Assertor Opinion
but ma lume, s ther (be being S Father,
terated
In short remain of their strike o themsel
not kno men, o ctive th will a to hack Mercy, Syllables
his cru
which
and u damn'd pal Pur medler
and Ser Inspira
watch'o the san do the or Taci tors, v
all Boo
the filth

Nor can she be restrain'd by the Defences of strenuous Assertors, or by the Decrees of Popes and Councils, or by Opinions which Princes and Magistrates have establish'd ; but making Inquiry into the original State of every Volume, she will impeach one of being interpolated ; lay another (because its Author is questionable) under a Suspicion of being Spurious ; and tho' perhaps she may allow a third its Father, yet slanderously report it to have been much adulterated in its original Complexion by Paint and Patches. In short, she so harrasses and torments all the Books that remain of Antiquity, by taking the Liberty, under Pretence of their being vitiated, mangled or interpolated, to add, strike out, and amend just as she pleases, that the Authors themselves, if they were to come to Life again, wou'd not know them to be their Offspring. You see, Gentlemen, of your selves, without my telling you, how destructive this Study is to the sacred Writings. For why ? will a learned Critic, and one that has been accusom'd to hack and burn, and treat Books of all Kinds without Mercy, with his deadly Pen to stab and wound Points, Syllables, Words and Sentences ; will he, I say, refrain his cruel Talons from the Records of divine Wisdom ; which till this Heresy arose always remain'd pure and uncorrupted ? O intolerable ! Impudence ! O damn'd Presumption, deserving to be restrain'd by eternal Punishments ! Will You, a most impertinent Intermeddler in other People's Works, handle the divine Words and Sentences of Moses and the Prophets, (written by Inspiration from God, and whose Purity is guarded and watch'd by the most diligent College of Pontiffs,) with the same Habit of Mind, the same Arrogance, as you do the dusty worm-eaten Volumes of Herodotus, Livy, or Tacitus ? Will you compare the vile Labours of Editors, who hastily publish'd (as such indeed is the fate of all Books) the Greek and Latin Authors for Sale, for a little filthy Lucre, with the Authors of Scripture ; whose minori cura divina gubernavit providentia, quam scriptorum mentes, ne in ulla litera vel vocabulo peccarent, comparabis? Tu, vitio create Censor, ut omnia labefactes, insignes meritis & fama viros, qui renatis literis & instaurata religione, primi typis descripta sacra oracula in vulgus emisere, in depravatos codices incidisse, & infinitis mendis macu-latis editiones nobis prodidisse adfirmabis? Tu, quo major codicum manu exaratorum copia reperitur, & variarum lectionum numerus magis crescat & augeatur, eo certius & securius Criticos legitima & vera verba adserere, & spuria ejicere posse, contendes? Quanto ad quietem publicam ecclesiae, quanto ad persuasionem vulgi stabiliendam adcommodatius, si confidentiae huic modo imposto, re-ceptae semel, & probatae per eos, qui in vernacu-las linguas verterunt, scripturae acquiescere, omnes etiam eruditissimi juberentur. Providendum est & occurrendum invalescenti, & vires jam maximas, etiam inter ipsos sacrarum literarum doctores, adse-cutae pesti: coercenda Criticorum infrenis temeri-tas; adigendus, quicumque sacris ordinibus initiatur, sacramento, ut conjuncta cum consortibus opera adulteratores sacrarum voluminum diris & execrationibus devovere ne pigretur. Munienda sanctionibus & poenis in vernaculas transfusa linguas divina oracula: videndum omnibus, summis, mediis, infimis antistitibus, ne res Christiana detrimentum capiat. Utinam felix illud, & desideratum votis tempus adfulgeat, quo, ut plebi securitatis exemplum praebeatur, nullus inter sacros interpretes reperiat, qui vel Hebraeos, vel Graecos, tot discrepantibus

Hands a Understa Word of dermine great an ing and the care with fa full of i much g ous Rea
 ly and the spu Peace o
 ple, if ven Me
 acquiesc stood an
 to their
 to prev
 so grea
 themsel
 ought holy O ready i curse Writing
 the sever securti Orders
 or Dea State m long d
 of the
 of the look in

O R A T I O N.

51

Hands and Pens divine Providence guided no less than their Understandings, that they should not mistake in the least Word or Letter? Base recreant Critic, wilt Thou, to undermine the Foundation of all, affirm that those truly great and deserving Men, who upon the Revival of Learning and Reformation of Religion, were the first that had the care of printing and publishing the sacred Oracles, met with faulty Copies, and handed down to us bad Editions full of infinite Mistakes? Will You contend that, by how much greater plenty of Manuscripts and number of various Readings there is, Critics can so much the more safely and certainly pitch upon the genuin Words and reject the spurious? How much better would it be for the Peace of the Church, and settling the Belief of the People, if a Stop were put to this Licentiousness, and all, even Men of the greatest Learning, were commanded to acquiesce in the Scripture, as it has been already understood and approv'd of by those who have translated it into their Mother Tongues. There ought to be Care taken to prevent this growing Pestilence, which has increas'd to so great a Head even among the Doctors of Divinity themselves: The unbridled Presumption of Critics ought to be restrain'd: Every one who is initiated into holy Orders ought to be oblig'd by an Oath to be always ready in Conjunction with the rest of his Fraternity to curse and excommunicate these Adulterers of the sacred Writings. The Divine Oracles, as they are translated into the several Languages of respective Countries, ought to be secur'd with Sanctions and Penalties: The Clergy of all Orders and Degrees, whether Archbishops, Bishops, Priests or Deacons, ought to look out sharp that the Christian State may receive no Detriment. I wish that happy and long desir'd Time were come, in which, as an Earnest of the Church's Peace, there could not be one Preacher of the Gospel found who would vouchsafe to handle or look into the Hebrew and Greek Copies, mangled with so panibus lectionibus deformatos, codices respicere aut tractare dignetur : sed, ut strenue jam facere coeperunt, omnes ita domesticis commentatoribus & interpretibus adhaereant & adquiescant, ut nullus posthac depravandae doctrinae ex Criticorum audacia metus suboriatur.

Satis multa jam mihi, & nimia fortasse vobis, fecisse verba de labe & contagione literarum humaniorum videri possem, nisi plurimos inter dicendum capita contulisse & admurmurasse animadvertissem, qui fortasse me nescio quid omisisse indignabuntur : & licet optimas sectae meae partes me prostrigasse & evertisse gaudeant, aliquid tamen ex pestifera humanitate, magis noxium & calamitosum, ad otiosi temporis oblectationem integrum mihi reservasse suspicabuntur. Nullam scilicet Poëtices à me in recensione damnatarum artium rationem esse habitam : quam ideo me forte silentio praeterissem alter alteri insusurrant, quia, cum aliarum disciplinae meae partium laudes numquam potuerim adsequi, deterritus laboris & operis difficultate, me cum multis ad carminis facilitatem contulerim. Sed, ut veram fatear, A. hanc in artes, mihi olim mirabiliter adamatas, orationem molienti, idem evenisse, quod omnibus, qui Poëtices illecebris & suavitate fascinantur, evenire solet, deprehendi ; Nec mihi, licet omnia facerem, & juventutis ille calor deficiens saniora suaderet, amabilem illam infantiam odisse aut relinquere posse, sum expertus. Utinam gravem illum & molestum, ut appellant, Deum pectore meo excutere ! Utinam ex animi sententia & efficaci oratione, vobis, quotquot adestis, Poëtae & Poëtastri, persuadere liceret, nihil stultius, nihil à communi hominis sensu alienius esse versificatore. Sed cum insanabilis ille per omnium homi-

sum

many d tily. beg Comm
never h the Imp

I mi
enough tience, c Learnin
while I dissatisfi omitted
I have my Pro
some r
Human Particul
demn'd other th because thing f
Branch
mour c
speak t tion up
found are bev was no
the ag now a that mi
my Br might Poëtastr
farther sifier.

many different Readings: but, as they have already heartily begun, would all so acquiesce in and adhere to the Commentators and Expositors of their own Countries, as never hereafter to fear their Doctrine should be deprav'd by the Impudence of the Critics.

I might very well be thought by this time to have said enough upon my own Account, and too much for your Patience, concerning the Mischiefs and ill Tendency of Humane Learning; if I had not taken notice that a great many, while I was speaking, laid their Heads together in a kind of dissatisfied Whisper; who are disgusted perhaps that I have omitted something: And, tho' they are very well pleas'd that I have routed and overthrown the Principal Branches of my Profession, are jealous of my having given Quarter to some more dangerous destructive Partizan of this plaguy Humanity, and reserv'd it for my own private Pleasures: Particularly that I have left Poetry out of my List of condemn'd Sciences; which perchance they whisper to each other that I have pass'd over in Silence upon this Account, because having been discourag'd by the Difficulty of the thing from attempting to make a Figure in any other Branch of my Profession, I fell in with the general Humour of the Age, and applied my self to Poetry. But to speak the Truth, Gentlemen, as I was making this Oration upon those Arts which I formerly so dearly lov'd, I found my self in the same Condition with all those who are bewitch'd with the Charms of Poetry; and that it was not in my Power, do all I could, to hate or forsake the agreeable Delusion; tho' the Heat of Youth being now abated gave me better Advice. I wish I could shake that mighty, that importunate God, as they call him, from my Breast! I wish my Inclinations and my Oratory might so far succeed, as to convince every Poet and Poetaster here, that there is nothing more foolish, nothing farther from common Sense and Reason than to be a Versifier. But since that incurable Distemper has spread it num ordines, aetates, & sexus ita pervaserit morbus, ut facilius oloxi nigro, quam homini occurras, qui non aliquando dementiae suam in versibus faciendis declaraverit; & cum in primis hoc insaniae genere venerabilis antistitum ordo ita antecellat, ut plura ab illis, quam ab universo hominum genere, effusa numerentur carmina; quid inhumanius, quid durius, quam hanc à me mihi & illis voluptatem extorqueri? Noceat licet morum integritati, corrumpat vitae sanctitatem, augeat à natura insitam fugendi & mentiendi libidinem petulans poëtici ingenii luxuries; capiant furiosi vates supra modum & fidem loquendi consuetudinem; dediscant mortales humane loqui & cogitare: relinquatur tamen viris gravibus & severis, qui se à vino & comissionibus, ab alea & omni ludicrorum genere, tamquam à nefaria temporis jactura segregarunt, haec unica otiosi temporis oblectatio. Blandum vocent & furtivam, quibus est vena malignior, venenum, quod se tacite & occulte per omnes vitae & muneris partes diffundat; non invidemus tamen sacris oratoribus, quos à liberae eloquentiae lemociniis excludimus, hanc unicam sui admirationem commovendi facilitatem. Consueta & contrita plebejo usu vocabula in puerorum praeceptoribus; communem dicendi normam in lectoribus & cantoribus; ex praescripto recitandi sententias vulgatissimas facilitatem in aegrotorum & miserorum consolatoribus, laudemus. In infantibus, mulieribus & idiotis, ab omni Poëticae laetitiae sensu alienis, quotidianas & certis conceptas verbis precandi formulas, quae, ad fastidium usque & satietatem repetitae, ad patrem nostrum in coelo temere ejiciuntur, toleremus. Vos, Deorum ex sanguine generati Poëtae, quos aurea coelo connectit catena, & à limosa terra

self art
a Degre than a himself
have dif
nary a n more P
what w rob my wanton
our Mo
our natu fiatic P ing out
ple forgo Amusen
a grave ty of dr
away th tation at them, c bly diffu Life; y
since w
quence,
Let us t
most cu
the Sick ordinary fairs of
to be und not the and daily Father
nauscate a golden

self among People of all Ranks, Ages and Sexes in such a Degree, that you may sooner meet with a black Swan, than a Man who has not at some time or other expos'd himself in Verse; and since the very Reverend the Clergy have distinguish'd themselves in this List in so extraordinary a manner, that they may be reckon'd the Authors of more Poems than all the rest of the World put together, what wou'd be more hard and inhuman than for me to rob my self and them of so much Pleasure? For tho' the wanton Sallics of Poetic Wit may hurt the Integrity of our Morals, debauch the Purity of our Lives, improve our natural Propensity to Fiction and Lying; tho' enthusiastic Poets may accustom themselves to a way of speaking out of all Reason and Belief; tho' it may make People forget to think and talk like Men; yet let this only Amusement of their leisure Hours be allow'd to Persons of a grave austere Life, since they deny themselves the Liberty of drinking, feasting and gossiping, and scorn to throw away their precious Time with a Die, or stake their Reputation at any Game. Let those, whose ill Nature prompts them, call it a flattering and subtle Poison which insensibly diffuses it self thro' the whole Business and Tenor of Life; yet let us not grudge our sacred Orators, especially since we have debar'd them the Charms of polite Eloquence, this only easy way of gaining a little Applause. Let us think it right in Preceptors to teach their Boys the most customary common Expressions; in those that visit the Sick, and comfort the afflicted, to be ready in quoting ordinary Sentences; and for People in the common Affairs of Life to use plain Sense, and speak so as most easily to be understood; In Children, Women and Ideots, who have not the least taste of Poetry, we may bear with the Forms and daily dry Repetitions with which they importune Our Father which is in Heaven, enough to make one loath and nauseate Devotion. You, heavenly-born Poets, link'd by a golden Chain to the azure Mansions of the Gods, who are

terra ad aetherios ignes pennarum remigio sublimes rapit Pierium & Phoebeum aestrum, allegetis potius amplissima verborum dignitate commendabiles preces & vota, ad tremendam numinis inaccessi-majestatem, ad terribilem agminum & exercituum Deum, qui lucem mortalibus non adeundam habitat; qui in excelsissimis coeli palatiis domicilio collocato, nubibus volucris & nimboris, ut solo in-ambulat, illisque ut curru triumphali, per aëra invectus, eisdem ut magnifica & splendenti veste amicitur; Qui caput lumine, cujus aspectum nemo sustinere potest, radiatum, velut flammanti diademate circumdat. Qui regalem & coruscantem thronum posuit in supremis coeli tabulatis, pedibus vero terrae ut scabello innititur, & solo ingrediens caput inter nubila abscondit. Cujus solium centies & millies centena millia satellitum, & innumerabilis ministrorum frequentia stipat. Cujus gloriam pi-ceae noctis densissima caligo, & rutilantis diei lucidissimus splendor, siderum & stellarum exsultantes chori, mirifico concentu enuntiant & enarrant. Cujus horrida voce coelum, terra & maria concuti-untur & tremiscunt. Ex cujus ignivomo ore flammae omnia devorantes emicant. Ad cujus denique tonitrua montes subsidunt & eliquesunt. Hunc-cine ego animae humillimae & ad terram semper adfixae subitum in altissima volatum deprimerem, qui toties ad Poëtas dithyrambicos me adgregare studens, vertice sublimi sidera pulsare adfectavi?
 Hanc in precando pompam & magnificentiam Poëticam gravarer, qui saepissime inter tot sonora Dei cognomina, & cumulat, quot neque in Orgiis Baccho Maenades inclamabant, titulos, tanto hor-rore perculsus obstupui, ut omni sensu orbat, quid deinde reliqua precatio, non minore spiritu erueta, are hun Wings

 bean R
 recom
 mendou
 Lord G
 proach the high flying fame th cloath'd crowns Diadem
 has plac
 of Heav
 Footsto
 among hundred innume
 Glory th
 most br Choirs
 in a wo ven, Ea
 fiery Mo
 at whos Should I
 of the p endeavor aspir'd to be for a Prayer?
 Titles m applied i with suc
 capable

are hurried aloft from the dampy Ground on your breezy Wings toward the Etherial Fires by a Pierian and a Phaëan Rage, you will rather adopt Prayers and Addresses recommended in a glorious Pomp of Words, To the tremendous Majesty of the inaccessible Deity, To the terrible Lord God of Hosts, who inhabits the Light not to be approach'd by Mortals; Who having his Dwelling-place in the highest Palaces of Heaven, walks upon the tempestuous flying Clouds as upon the Ground, and riding upon the same thro' the Air as in a Triumphal Chariot, is likewise cloath'd with them as with a glorious shining Robe; Who crowns his Head with radiant Light as with a flaming Diadem, so that no Creature is able to behold it; Who has plac'd his regal dazzling Throne upon the highest Beams of Heaven, but treads on the Earth with his Feet as on a Footstool, and walking upon the Ground hides his Head among the Clouds; Round about whose Throne are a hundred thousand times a hundred thousand Hosts, and an innumerable Attendance of ministring Spirits; Whose Glory the most thick Darkness of pitchy Night, and the most bright Splendor of the lightsom Day, the joyful Chorus of Sun, Moon and Stars, do tell forth and declare in a wonderful Concert; At whose dreadful Voice, Heaven, Earth and Seas quake and tremble; From whose fiery Mouth all-devouring Flames are darted forth; And at whose Thundrings the Mountains sink down and melt. Should I then damp and repress this sudden soaring Flight of the poor earthly groveling Soul? I? who, so often endeavouring to herd with the Pindaric Throng, have aspir'd to strike the Stars with my lofty Head. Should I be for abolishing this Poetic Pomp and Magnificence in Prayer? I? who at the rumbling Epithets of God, and Titles more accumulated than the drunken Manades ever applied in their Orgies to Bacchus, have been often struck with such Awe as has made me quite senseless, and incapable of understanding what the remaining part of the ta, à Deo tam horrifico contenderet, plane non intelligerem? Egone his deliciis à puero infatuatus, in Poëtico buccinatore voces nova forma percussas, & sesquipedalem in modum ita extensas, ut vel una aurem implere possit, reprobarem? Egone innutritus figuris, & tralationibus audacissimis, à grandiloquentissimo praecone non omnem verborum vilitatem & sententiarum humilitatem ad plebem delegarem? Immo vero ego adhuc in Homeri, Virgilii & Nasonis mei elegantissimis haerens, & circa verborum corticem oberrans, à divinis vatum interpretibus discere dedignarer, qua via & ratione in abdita & abscondita sub vocabulis mysteria penetrarem? Quis enim nostrum, qui sine ulla religione Poëtas tractare solemus, suspicari umquam potuisset, nisi poëtici divinae doctrinae antistites praevisissent, longe alia fuisse Trojanae & Romanae urbis fata, quam vel vulgus ex commentitiis & absurdis fabulis, vel doctissimi interpretes ex Heraclidæ Allegoriis, vel Fulgentii Continentia Virgiliana sibi finxerunt? Quis adfirmare umquam ausus fuisset, Israëliticæ & Christianæ ecclesiæ imaginem, Iliade, Odyssea & Aeneide adumbrari? Quis, nisi gravissimi omnium temporum Praesules praemonstrassent, in animum inducere sustinuisset, Virgilium in divina illa Ecloga quarta, sub Salonini nomine, Christi natales, & temporis beati reparationem praecinuisse? Quis Ovidium in elaborata illa, & omnibus coloribus expressa aurei seculi tabula, depinxisse principis humani generis Adami integritatem & excellentiam? Perpetuum illud & aeternum ver, pulcherrimam in viridario coelesti semper florentis innocentiae esse effigiem; cuius spatium cum Jupiter, labente in deterius homine, contraxerit, & annum in quatuor tempestates descripserit, quatuor simul omnium, quibus duraturus

Prayer,

Prayer, b
so terrifyin these Del
with the
which are of them
taphor w when I fir low Stile
the vulga
with the
lye fumbly disdain to phets the ceal'd un
at us'd t some Poe ever have were quie fancied fr learned C or Fulgen have dar'd Church v
Who, un it out, c
that divi Saloninus, of that bl where in had defec Author o Spring w cence in Man's fa
the Year

Prayer, belcht out in the same Spirit, intended to ask of so terrifying a God. Should I, who have been mad after these Delights from my Childhood, pretend to find fault with the entertaining Strains of a Poetic Trumpeter, which are warbled out in so lengthen'd a Note, that one of them can fill the Ear? Should I, who suckt in Metaphor with my Milk, and studied bold Transitions when I first learnt to walk, be against banishing the humble low Stile from the sublime Preacher, and confining it to the vulgar Laity? Nay but should I, charm'd as I am with the Elegancies of Homer, Virgil, or my dear Ovid, lye fumbling with the Beauties of their Expressions, and disdain to learn from the divine Interpreters of the Prophets the way to penetrate into the private Mysteries conceal'd under those Expressions? For which of us, who are us'd to handle the Poets without any Religion, unless some Poetical Divines had broken the Way for us, could ever have suspected that the Destinies of Troy and Rome were quite other Things than what ordinary People have fancied from the absurd silly Fables of them, or the most learned Commentators from the Allegories of Heraclides or Fulgentius's Continentia Virgiliana. Who would ever have dar'd to aver that a Type of the Jewish and Christian Church were shadow'd under the Iliad, Odyssee, and Aeneid? Who, unless the gravest Prelates that ever liv'd had pointed it out, could have taken it into his Head, that Virgil, in that divine Poem his fourth Eclogue, under the name of Saloninus, had foretold the Birth of Christ, and the Approach of that blessed Time? Or that Ovid, in that elaborate Piece, where in such fine colouring he paints the golden Age, had describ'd the Integrity and Excellence of Adam the Author of Mankind? That the perpetual and uninterrupted Spring was a Representation of the ever blooming Innocence in Paradise; whose Space when Jupiter, upon Man's falling into Wickedness, had shorten'd, and divided the Year into four Seasons, that they presignified the four

Stages

est orbis, temporum decursus praesignificasse. Ver-jam imminutum, brevem illum & caducum humanae felicitatis florem; Aestatem ipsi proximam, inflammatum in omnes libidines & flagitia hominis aestum; Autumnum, maturitatem & plenam, per frugiferum Servatoris adventum, ubertatem; Hye-mem denique ultima illa, quae nunc vivimus, tempora, quibus omnia pietatis & sanctitatis studia frigent & congelant, designare. Jovem in terras delapsum, ipsam exprimere Dei tremendi praesen-tiam, qua Lycaonem, Cainum notum feritate par-ricidam, ejusque sequaces, lupos verius quam homines, dignis suppliciis adfecit; vel potius, quia sub humana imagine terras lustrasse canitur, esse veris-simam Christi figuram, qui inhospita luporum, id est, ipso interprete, Pharisaeorum & Scribarum recta subierit. In Deucalione Noachum, in Apol-line, mundi oculo, omnia illustrante, & serpentem immanem, oracula divina obsidentem, telis conficiente, praenuntiari solem Justitiae Christum, lucem omnibus gentibus salutare, medicum simul despe-ratae salutis hominum, & sibi adversantium perditorem; qui antiquum illum anguem, Daemonum principem, telis justitiae & verbi sui interemit.
 In tripode Christi corpus, humanam naturam, & divinam potentiam; in cithara, quae chordis ten-ditur, nervos Christi in cruce expansos, quibus tri-stes & damnati mortales exhilarantur, latere.
 Totam denique, ne singula evolvam, Metamorphoseon seriem esse manifestam praeteriti & futuri temporis designationem; & longe aliud quid, quam literae & verba indicant, notare; & in Nasonis non minus, quam in Cajaphae mentem vaticinandi vim se insinuasse. O incredibilem acuminis Poëtici vim! O stupendam veri per tot umbras & nebulas perspicentiam! O inexhaustam ingeniis acuen-dis

Stages of Spring, a Flower of which is
 were infla-Autumn, sion'd by Winter, t affections
 That Ju-very Pres-condign p
 and his ther, beca
 the Form of Christ, Wolves, a fees. Th Apollo, t Things, a vine Ora-
 that savin desperate pose him his Word That by human N strung w Cross, by short, no
 the Meta past and the Lette with as credible
 the Truth

Stages of Time which the World is to last. That the Spring, as it was reduc'd, shew'd the shortliv'd fading Flower of human Happiness in the Garden; The Summer, which is next to it, that hot raging Lust by which Men were inflam'd to all manner of wicked inordinate Desires; Autumn, the plentiful Harvest and fruitful Vintage occasion'd by the seasonable coming of our Saviour; And lastly Winter, these latter Days in which we live, wherein all affections of Piety and Holiness are quite cold and frozen. That Jupiter's coming down upon Earth, paints out the very Presence of the tremendous God when he executed condign punishment upon that Lycaon, Cain the Parricide and his Associates, more truly Wolves than Men; or rather, because he is sung to have travel'd over the Earth in the Form of a Man, that it is a most true representation of Christ, who went under the inhospitable Roofs of those Wolves, as he himself call'd them, the Scribes and Pharisees. That Noah is couch'd under Dencalion; and that in Apollo, the Eye of the World, who gives Light to all Things, and slew the vast Serpent that lay before the Divine Oracles, Christ the Sun of Righteousness is foretold, that saving Light to all Nations, both a Physician to the desperate Case of Mankind, and a Destroyer of all that oppose him; who with the Weapons of Righteousness and his Word slew that old Serpent, the Prince of the Devils. That by the Tripes are signified the Body of Christ, his human Nature and Divine Power; by the Harp, which is strung with Strings, the Sinews of Christ strain'd upon the Cross, by which poor damn'd Souls are made merry. In short, not to mention any more, that the whole Series of the Metamorphoses is a manifest Resemblance of the Time past and to come; and signifies quite another Thing than the Letters and Words imply; and that Ovid was taken with as great a Fit of Prophecy as Caiaphas, O incredible Force of a Poetic Sight! O amazing Discovery of the Truth, thro' so many Clouds and Shadows! O inexdis materiem! quae in minutissima sacrorum vatum carmina immensae molis & ponderis commentarios nobis quotidie producet. Tene ego sacris concionibus ejectam, tene ego ad otiosos & nugaces versificatores relegatam vellem? Immo vero, cum tam benignam te mihi, tam facilem hodie te, diva Poësis, omnibus praebeas, ita precor, ita voveo, ut dulcissima insaniae tuae omnibus in Academiis, templis, concionibus, coetibus, libris & sermonibus vestigia impressa relinquere ne desistas.

Sed mittendos tandem majorum gentium Doctores, tempus, quod prae furore nihil sentienti fere effluxit, admonet; & satis jam mihi divinos vates propitiatos, aeternamque me ab Antistitibus, quod tam liberali animo meas ipse damnaverim & ejuraverim artes, gratiam iniisse confido. Major mihi & justior à conscriptis Juris prudentium Patribus metus injicitur: non enim ea docilitate, qua divini juris interpretes celebrantur, humanarum legum sequestros censerì novi. Principatum etiam inter illos tenere non ignoro, qui prae fracte & per visaciter, omnia humanitatis studia juris scientiae indissolubili nexu socianda esse, pertendunt; nec facile hoc Palladium, aut Diomedea vi, aut Ulixeo dolo sibi eripi patientur. Immo familiam inter eos ducere scio, qui non modo historiae veteris lumine obscuras legum latebras semper esse illustrandas, sed ipsum juris Romani studium (en quo pervenimus!) nobilissimam antiquae historiae partem esse discipulis persuadere conantur. Quos neque Papiniani dignitas, neque Ulpiani auctoritas, neque ipsius Justiniani, gloriosissimi imperatoris, majestas deterret, ut à sacratissimo legum codice Criticas manus abstineant; qui in singulis literis, verbis, & inter-punctionibus dies noctesque habitantes, sua opera omnes

haustible
every Dr
tions up
Should I
confine T
Thou, G
still so in Prayer, n
the dear fities, Ch courses in

But th
while I
puts me of the up ficiently Obligatio damn'd a greater a Law: F
ses are r Barristers are such Studies o
of the L from the tain ther
suade th
Law ou History,
what we Ancient
nor the himself,
their cri
the Law

haustible Fund for improving of Ingenuity! which will every Day produce such weighty and significant Observations upon the most trivial Writings of the Holy Poets. Should I go to banish Thee from Sacred Sermons, and confine Thee to idle trifling Rhimers? Yea rather, since Thou, Goddess Poetry, hast been so kind to me, and art still so indulgent and easy to every Body, I make it my Prayer, my Wish, that Thou wouldst never cease to leave the dear Impressions of thy Enthusiasm in all the Universities, Churches, Sermons, Convocations, Books and Discourses in the World.

But the Time, which has run away almost insensibly while I was speaking with so much Warmth, at length puts me in Mind that it is proper to dismiss the Doctors of the upper Region; and I am confident that I have sufficiently apologiz'd for Divine Poetry, and laid an eternal Obligation upon the Clergy, in having so disinterestedly damn'd and exploded my own Profession. I have much greater and juster Reason to be afraid of the Fathers of the Law: For I know that the Solicitors of human Causes are not thought so likely to be my Converts, as the Barristers of Divinity. The chief of whom I am sensible are such as obstinately and stiffly contend, that all human Studies ought inseparably to be join'd with the knowledge of the Law: and will not suffer this Palladium to be taken from them, either by Force or Stratagem. Nay I am certain there are some amongst them, who endeavour to persuade their Scholars, not only that the obscure parts of the Law ought always to be illustrated by the light of Ancient History, but that the very Study of the Roman Law (see what we are come to!) is it self the most noble Part of Ancient History: Whom neither the Dignity of Papinian, nor the Authority of Ulpian, nor the Majesty of Justinian himself, that glorious Emperor, can overawe, so as to keep their criticizing Clutches from the most hallow'd Code of the Laws: Who poring Night and Day over every Letter, omnes formosissimi corporis mendas elui posse jactant. Hos tacitus praeterire decrevi; desperatis enim medici negant remedia esse adhibenda; & ipse praeter modum extimesco, ne injecta manu me, non modo ut emansorem, sed ad viliores artes transfugam reprehendant, & interdicto mecum contendant. Sed si jam Academiis excludar, ad forum viam obfirmabo, ubi facile legulejis & pragmaticis, qui gloriosae vocis subsidio miserorum fortunas defendunt, persuasurum me puto, ne lucrosam illam & honoratam artem per ingenuarum contagionem extabescere, & ad mendicitatem projici patiantur. Nec tamen omnis spes ita evolavit, ut nullos ex Academicis patribus in partes trahere desperem. Contractae certe & compendiariae Jurisprudentiae doctores, si jam non mei sint, nullo negotio conciliaturus esse videor: hos enim, cum ad nudum linguarum & eloquentiae nomen toto corpore exhorrescant, & sua sponte nullam umquam humanioris disciplinae partem attigerint, & omni conatu discipulos ab ea debortentur, exsultaturos spero, ubi inter ipsos literatores, me facilitatis & laborum fugae patronum se reperisse triumphabunt. Hos, si à Graesae linguae usu deterrere vellem, idem foret, ac si, ne Lapporum aut Finncorum linguam, unde nullum sperari potest lucrum, addiscere vellent, rogarem. Si promptis & ad quotidianam garrulitatem paratissimis magistris, munditiem & exactum sermonis Latini nitorem commendare vellem, non plus proficerem, quam si Sarmatas & Pannonios à Gothicæ vel Langobardicæ linguae facilitate ad Ciceronianam dicendi molestiam transferre conarer. Ad eloquentiae studia, & dicendi scribendique exercitationem, vos, Juris brevissimi candidati, excitare nihil attinet; cum ex hac Academica cavea evolantes, ter, Wor

the Imp
way. T it is the
be applic no small loper, bu
Outlaw. ties, I v fancy I torneys, Voice de their hor
and be r Learning
gaining verfities.
have but short co
great Jo who is pains as mention meddled always i
I were would l Tongue to get t
to thefe Latin, i vour to natural felves in put Yo Law, up

ter, Word and Interpunction, boast that by their Help all the Imperfections of that beautiful Body may be done away. These I am determin'd to pass over in silence; for it is the opinion of Physicians, that no Remedy ought to be applied, where the Patient is past Hopes: And I am in no small Fear, lest they should seize me not only as an E-loper, but as a Defserter to viler Arts, and treat me like an Outlaw. But if I should for this be expell'd the Universities, I will enter my self at the Inns of Court, where I fancy I shall easily persuade the little Pettifoggers and Attorneys, who by the mighty Operation of their glorious Voice defend the Fortunes of the miserable, never to suffer their honourable and advantageous Profession to pine away and be reduc'd to Beggary by the Contagion of ingenuous Learning. Nor have I so far lost all Hopes as to despair of gaining over to my Side, some of the Seniors of our Universities. Certainly, if they are not mine already, I shall have but little trouble in bringing over the Doctors of the short compendiary Law. They I hope will triumph with great Joy, to find even among the Men of Letters one who is an Advocate for Inaccuracy and taking as little pains as possible; since they shudder all over at the bare mention of the Languages and Eloquence, and never meddled with any part of human Learning themselves, but always industriously discourag'd their Scholars from it. If I were to go to dissuade these from learning Greek, it would be the same as desiring them not to learn the Tongues of Lapland or Finland, which they can't expect to get the least Advantage by. If I were to recommend to these nimble Tongue-Pads the Beauty and Elegance of Latin, it would signify just as much as if I should endeavour to persuade the Goths and Vandals to forsake their natural Barbarism, and be at the Trouble to express themselves in the Elegance of Cicero. It is of no Moment to put You, Gentlemen, who are design'd for the common Law, upon the Studies of Eloquence, of speaking and writing lantes, non humanos sonos edere, sed pitarum ritu convivari, aut canina verba lurrare; nec sincero, sed cum omnium gentium & nationum fetibus commixto, sermone chartas inquinare promptissime discetis. Ad Historiarum & veteris memoriae immensa spatia vos excurrere juberem? quorum ipsi magistri, & securae navigationis gubernatores, numquam rarem Juris Oceano, in quo tot breviora, tot scopuli, committere sunt ausi, sed clausis in piscinis, & lascubus, cymba tantum ludere cum discipulis consueverunt. A Critica temeritate non modo Professores, omnem dijudicandi vim conviciis proscindentes, sed in primis recocti in foro proclamatores vos facile revocabunt, qui execranda Criticorum capita tot diris devovere solent, eosque quotidiana criminatione falsarum & corruptarum tabularum ex Lege Cornelia reos agere non desistunt. Qui judicum auribus occlamare non pigrantur, Criticorum audacia leges, quae certae & definitae esse debent, convelli & everti; omne jus, bonum & aequum deleri, & nisi modus huic temeritati imponatur, brevi omnia jura dubia, incerta, & judicum religionem solutissimam fore, non vane ominantur. A Poëtico furor illos, qui praeter alios Prudentes appellari adfectant, retrahere nihil est negotii: Ab hoc enim mentis vitio alienissimi semper habiti legum conditores & interpretes, qui, cum omnem ingenii vim & mentis aciem in enodandis legum laqueis, in torquendis in causam suam Principum & Senatum decretis, in prudentum responsis dubiis & perplexis excutiendis, obtuderunt & consumpserunt, nihil fere sibi caloribus & impetus effundendo carmini superesse deprehendunt. Nam ludere & joculari eos, inter facilioris Jurisprudendae doctores, credatis, qui Poëticam & Poëtarum veterum meditationem Romani juris studio sociandam esse clamant. Ne cre-

ting well;
of this Oag to utter hu like Dogs;
one made Shou'd I o
ancient Ti Pilots, hav into an C Quicksand
with a fin ly your Pr nice Disti that will e tion of be with so on the Sta in the Ear ing certain Boldness c are destroy ceedings, t selves will turn Freet
a Poëtical styl'd Lea
preters of that Disti spend all Invention
crees and cussing th
they have ductions.
ctors of
and readi

ting well; since immediately upon your being let fly out of this Cage of the University, you will readily learn not to utter human Sounds, but to scold like Magpies, or snarl like Dogs; and to scribble no one intire Language, but one made up of the Dreggs of all Nations and Countries. Shou'd I order you to sally out into the spacious Fields of ancient Times and Histories? When your Masters, like safe Pilots, have never ventur'd to launch their Law-Frigate into an Ocean, where there are so many Rocks and Quick sands, but choose rather to divert their Scholars with a small Skiff in Lakes and Fishponds. 'Tis not only your Professors, tho' they rail heartily at all pretenders to nice Distinction, but the old smoaky Pleaders in Court, that will easily keep you from running into the Presumption of being Critics; who load that damn'd Fraternity with so many Curses, and indite them every Day upon the Statute of Forgery. Who eternally dun the Judges in the Ears with information of Acts, that, instead of being certain and exprefs, are mangled and perverted by the Boldness of the Critics: that all Right, Justice and Equiry are destroy'd: and that unless a stop be put to these rash proceedings, they verily believe, in a short time the Laws themselves will become doubtful and uncertain, and the Judges turn Freethinkers. I shall have little trouble to dissuade from a Poetical Phrenzy, those who above others affect to be styl'd Learned in the Law: For the Compilers and Interpreters of Laws have always been reckon'd very free from that Distemper; who being oblig'd to hammer out and spend all the vigour of their Fancy, and sharpness of Invention, in unraveling knotty Points, in wresting Decrees and Acts of Parliament to serve their purpose, in discussing the dubious and perplex'd answers of Council, find they have but little Fire and Heat left for Poetical Productions. For you must needs think those facetious Doctors of the Law are only in jest, who say, that Poetry and reading the old Poets ought to be join'd with the credatis ex animi sententia, res tam diversas, & tam longo à se spatio disjunctas illos in unum velle conducere; sed haec, dicis causa, ut ipsi amant loqui, & quia aliud, quod dicerent, non habebant, in populum ideo effundere, ut gloriosis illis literarum & eloquentiae magistris vices reddant: solent enim illi, ventoso Cicerone non minores spiritus gerentes, se quoque triduo profiteri posse Jurisprudentiam, praedicare. Non absurde ergo, nullis umquam sacris Poëticis initiati, sed callidi juris scholastici interpretes, se quoque, si stomachum illis literatores commoveant, repente invitis Musis, Apolline irato, Poëtas prodire posse, ostentant. Nam tritam illam literatis ad carmina viam numquam ingredi dignatos, nec vanam Poëseos laudem & gloriam eos vehementer adfectare, versus domestica include effecti, & metu legis Fabiae, nullo colore antiquitatis tincti, aperte declariant. Relinquitte ergo, & velis remisque fugite, Themidis aureae alumni, pannosas famelicorum artes, & ad quaestuariam caussidicinam (ignoscite verbo vobis vernaculo) omnes nervos intendite, mibique, quod tam fructiferi & salutaris consilii auctor exstiterim, vel potius compendiorum inventoribus, qui vos uno saltu ex ludis literariis in amplissimam curiae & fori lucem transtulerunt, aeternas gratias debete.
Study

Si vero ab ullo eruditorum ordine mihi gratia sit ineunda, vester, o salutis humanae praesides & conservatores, favor & benevolentia accuratius nunc mihi esset concilianda. Et nisi ambitio, qua me tam studiose in priorum classium amicitiam insinquare tentavi, tempus eripuisset, longa oratione tam sedulos salubritatis nostrae custodes delenirem. Osenderem, nihil esse importunius, nihil crudelius molestis illis literarum magistris, qui incolumitatis publicae vigiles ab operosa illa arte, quae nec dies otio-

sum?

sos,

Study of
rious wh rent Natu
cause they
the People of Eloque Tully him of the civi Professors
into the M their Sple in spite of
in their o
without
festly dem
the vulgar tious of a golden Th Arts, and the gainfu
being reli
me, who to the Au one jump Courts of

Now i
any partic most Pair Guardians
the Ambi
insinuate
Classes, h
plement v Constituti
nent, not of Learni

Study of the Roman Law. Don't imagin they are serious when they would unite Things of such very different Natures, but only speak it for Form's sake; and, because they have nothing else to say, advance this to amuse the People, that they may quit scores with the Professors of Eloquence and Learning: who being as vainglorious as Tully himself, brag that they can make themselves Masters of the civil Law in three Days. Therefore say the cunning Professors of the Law, very a propos, tho' never initiated into the Mysteries of Poetry, if the Men of Letters raise their Spleen, that they too can immediately commence Poets in spite of either Apollo or the Muses. For the Verses made in their own Language, and, for fear of the Fabian Law, without the least tincture of Antiquity in them, manifestly demonstrate that they never vouchsaf'd to tread in the vulgar Path that leads to Poetry, nor were very ambitious of a Reputation that way. Fly therefore, ye Sons of golden Themis, and quit with speed these ragged beggarly Arts, and apply your selves with all might and main to the gainful Vocation of the Law; where You are sure of being reliev'd; and own your selves eternally oblig'd to me, who have given you such useful Counsel, or rather to the Authors of Abridgements, who transport you at one jump from School, to blaze in open Light before the Courts of Justice.

Now if I had a Mind to ingratiate my self with any particular Order of learned Men, I should take the most Pains to obtain your favour and goodwill, ye Guardians and Conservers of human Health. And if the Ambition with which I so earnestly endeavour'd to insinuate my self into the Friendship of the two foregoing Classes, had not too far wasted my Time, I should complement with a long Speech such diligent Stewards of our Constitutions. I would shew that nothing is more impertinent, nothing more cruel than those troublesome Masters of Learning, who would call off the Watchmen of the public sos, nec noctes quietas concedit, ad nugaces & vitae humanae inutiles doctrinas avocare student; & humanitatis commentitiae Professores, qui sectae suae otiosis oblectamentis occupatissimos interpellare instituunt, non de illis modo, sed de universo orbe pessime mereri. Vacabitne vobis, Aesculapii & Hygiae sacerdotes, quibus nec ad cibum, nec ad somnum capiendum tempora supersunt, ad Grammaticorum tricas oculos adiacere, ad pueriles de vocabulis, & ridiculas de minutissimis rebus contentiones mentem adplicare? Novi multos Graci sapientis dictum jactare, si non essent Medici, nihil ineptius Grammaticis fore. Sed si quid salis, aut veri in trito dictorio insit, in eos unice Medicos, qui inutilibus artibus eruditos se ostendunt, congruere existimo: & nihil ineptius esse Medico, linguarum docto, eloquentiae studio se efferenti, in Historiarum scientia curioso, & Poëtices illecebris depravato, consentire possum. Quicumque enim duo certissimae artis principia & fundamenta, jam ab Hippocratis aevo jacta, Rationem & Experientiam esse fateatur, illico & facile ineptissimum esse medicum, qui ullam temporis partem in humanioris studii meditationem insumit, negare non sustinebit. Ad rationem excolendam & perpoliendam, quid, quaeso, artium, quibus nulla constat ratio, studia conferre possent, cum & surdorum & mutorum mentibus incredibilem sollertiam ingeneratam miremur? ad usum confirmandum, quid confusa & imperfecta linguarum cognitio faciet, cum indoctissimos & rudes aptiores sanandis morbis vulgo judicari, & longa remediorum experientia famam & auctoritatem sibi invidendam constituere, quotidie videamus? An cariota veterum monumenta, humani corporis machinam, ejusque infinitos artus & membra, quae ma-

public we
neither Lei
together t that the Pr who woul Entertainm
only, but c sculapius, a Time to ea the Toys o on childish cant Trifle which says be the sillie or Truth i to those P what belon nothing is the Langu is curious Poetry. I
perience a
of this Ar tes his Tim fician, wh Human La
which ha tivating an dible Cun
are deaf a Knowledg
rience, fir
commonl Experienc
and Fortu Monumen
Make of

public welfare from that business, which allows them neither Leisure by Day, nor Rest by Night, to Studies altogether trifling and useless for any Purpose of Life: And that the Professors of Humanity, as they call themselves, who would interrupt Men of such Business with the idle Entertainments of their Sect, deserve very ill, not of them only, but of the whole World. Can you, O Priests of Æsculapius, and the Goddess of Health, who have scarce Time to eat or sleep, be at leisure to cast your Eyes upon the Toys of the Grammarians, to bend your Thoughts upon childish Disputes about Words, and the most insignificant Trifles? I know that many urge the Greek Proverb, which says, If there were no Physicians, Grammarians would be the silliest Fellows in the World. But, if there's any Wit or Truth in that Saying, I am of Opinion it is applicable to those Physicians only, who shew any Learning but what belongs to their Profession: And I readily agree that nothing is more silly than a Physician who is skill'd in the Languages, who aims to be thought Eloquent, who is curious in History, and debauch'd with the Pleasures of Poetry. For whoever acknowledges that Reason and Experience are the two infallible Principles or Fundamentals of this Art, which have been founded ever since Hippocrates his Time, can't deny but he must be a very silly Physician, who spends any part of his Time in the pursuit of Human Learning. What, I pray, could the Study of those Arts, which have nothing to do with Reason, contribute to the cultivating and polishing of Reason; since we admire an incredible Cunning, which is bred in the Minds of those that are deaf and dumb? What will a confus'd and imperfect Knowledge of Languages signifie towards gaining Experience, since we daily see the most illiterate Fellows are commonly reckon'd the best Physicians, and by a long Experience in Medicine establish themselves a Reputation and Fortune that many would be glad of? Will the musty Monuments of Antiquity bring us acquainted with the Make of a human Body and its several Joynts and Parts, which nu tractare, oculis scrutari debet medicus, pernoscenda dabant? an improba & vehemens librorum lectio, usui & experientiae, quae ipso opere & exercitatione confirmatur, copias ministrabit? An peregrini sermonis ubertas morborum consequentia principia & causas, earumque progressus docebit? an haec omnia non potius memoriam, fidelissimum illud omnium artium adjumentum, infirmabunt? Si enim Medicinae cultor per omnem vitae cursum nihil ageret, nisi morborum, vitiorum, seminum, herbarum, radicum, metallorum, medicaminum, potionum, & infinitae supellectilis, quibus tabernae & apothecae armantur, nomina edisceret, centesimam illam partem vix exhaustire posse constaret. Quis ergo, nisi molestus paedagogus, flagitaret, ut plenum jam & constipatum illum thesaurum immenso omnium linguarum & vocabulorum pondere magis magisque oneraret? Quis congerere eodem reliquias veterum populorum, regum & ducum res gestas, opera belli & pacis, leges, mores & instituta, sacras, civiles & militares antiquitates juberet, nisi qui occidere conservatores generis humani vellet? si quid vacui in tam sani cerebri hominibus remaneat, magna satis quotidie novarum pestium & remediorum multitudo emergit, quorum omnium appellationes qui in ore & mundo habere potest, nae ille ipsum Simoniden memoriae divitiis provocare potest. Eloquentiae magistro se formandos traderent Medici, qui mutas & elingues per omnem aetatem se artes exercere profitentur? quorum mentibus verissimum illud ex Apollinis tripode responsum semper obversatur, non verbis, sed manu, non sermone, sed opere morbos sanari. Quam invidenda vobis, illustres Phoebea arte viri, dignitas contingit? quam longe oratoribus, & ceteris eruditorum ordinibus antecellitis? His nulla auctoritas, nullum pondus,

nisi

which a strict and
 Use and E Practice
 one the Ca
 will not a faithful A Physic, s
 his Life, Seeds, He
 an infinite Druggist's
 tain he w
 of them.
 go to add mensc W not a min them upo Ancients,
 the Busin
 stitutions,
 can be a new Dist
 daily to f
 to repeat the famo themselve
 who hav Arts; W
 from Ap not with Illustrious ye enjoy deed all no Auth

which a Physician ought to handle and inspect ? Will a strict and mighty Reading of Books lend any Assistance to Use and Experience, which are form'd upon Exercise and Practice only ? Will plenty of strange Languages teach one the Causes, Sympmtoms and Consequences of Diseases ? Or will not all these things rather weaken the Memory, that faithful Assistant of all Arts ? For, if one that professes Physic, should do nothing else thro' the whole course of his Life, but learn the Names of Diseases, Infirmities, Seeds, Herbs, Roots, Metals, Medicaments, Potions, and an infinite Number of more such Stuff, with which the Druggist's and Apothecary's Shops are furnish'd, it is certain he wou'd scarce be able to go thro' the hundredth Part of them. Who then, but an impertinent Pedant would go to add to this vast Store, and still load it with the immense Weight of Words and Languages ? Who, that had not a mind to kill the Saviours of Mankind, wou'd put them upon digesting and comparing the Remains of the Ancients, the Transactions of Kings and Commanders, the Business of Peace and War, Laws, Manners and Institutions, Antiquities sacred, civil, and military ? If there can be any empty Place in such sound Heads, there are new Distempers, and as many new Remedies that arise daily to fill it ; the Names of all which, whoever is able to repeat or produce any how, may be able to challenge the famous Memory-Master. Should the Physicians put themselves into the Hands of Masters of Eloquence ? they who have always profess'd to exercise dumb and silent Arts ; Who always keep in Mind that most true Answer from Apollo's Tripod, that Distempers are to be heal'd, not with Words but Hands, not by Discourse but Practice. Illustrious Sons of Phœbus, what a desirable Dignity do ye enjoy ? How vastly do you excel the Orators, and indeed all other Ranks of Learned Men ? They can gain no Authority, no Weight without a long Preamble and nisi quod magno verborum ambitu & pompa conciliant : vobis sine sermone, etiam antequam loqui incipiatis, fides habetur. Ubi vero os aperitis, non homines verba fundere, sed praesentes Deos oracula edere, omnes nobis persuademus. Mercurium, facundum Atlantis nepotem, eloquentiae parentem & conditorem, quem primum voce homines formasse Poetae jactant, vobis solis, etiam sine linguarum sacrificio, propitiare datur. Caduceum, inane illud & inefficax blandae & fallacis orationis argumentum, argentibus oratoribus porrigit ; vobis, ingentium divitiarum sponsor, extensa manu & inclinato corpore gravem nummis crumenam jactat & ostentat. Vastrum Deorum & hominum interpretem, aureos montes mystis suis pollicentem, vos, Hermeticorum arcanorum antistites, veneremini. Huic in triviis, quae pererratis, huic ad januas & thalamos, ex quadrato marmore statuas erigite. Huic Deo arae perpetuis ignibus collucescant, votis & precibus nuncupatis ; ut artes, strophas, & honesta furta, ingenii & sollertiae certissima documenta, sine invidiae aut calumniae metu fortunare velit. Minervam, non bellatricem, aut hasta & Aegide terribilem, non lucubrantibus infaustum nocturnae comitatu omen, sed Cecropiam, Medicam & Hygieam, quae, projecto scuto, deposita cuspidе, ablegato bubone, Aesculapii insignibus decorata, & serpentis sibilis blanda & indulgens, nihil agentibus, immo dormientibus remedia monstrat, adorate. Mendicantes Musas, & anili virginitate, quia dotem & maritos reperire non potuerunt, despiciatissimas puellas, ut pestes, vitate ; & ipsum Poetae titulum cane pejus & angue odio habete, ne imperitum vulgus magicis carminibus Daemunia, corpus humanum infestantia, expellere vos calumniatur. Sonora

H

Pomp

Pomp of any Disce
when you Men spea
the Privi Sacrifice
son of whom th
To the p insignific
as an Aff Hand gr Guineas.
preter of
of Gold
of the H ble in th and Cha tars blaz Prayers
or Calu Arts, Tr
tions of nerua, r and Shi o'er her Patrone laying Livery
Snakes
Remed
tho' you
Wench
had Fo
as you
you ha

Pomp of Words; You have a Regard paid you without any Discourse, even before you begin to speak. But when you open your Mouths, we don't look upon you as Men speaking, but as Gods declaring Oracles. You have the Priviledge of making' propitious, even without the Sacrifice of the Tongue, Mercury the well-spoken Grandson of Atlas, the Patron and Founder of Eloquence, whom the Poets celebrate as the Author of Speech in Men. To the poor Orators he extends his Caduceus, that empty insignificant Symbol of false flattering Words: To you, as an Assurer of mighty Riches, with a low Bow and a Hand gracefully reach'd out, he presents a large Purse of Guineas. Let us all therefore Worship this crafty Interpreter of Gods and Men, who promises such Mountains of Gold to his Votaries, and You his Priests the Keepers of the Hermetic Mysteries. To him, erect Statues of Marble in the Streets where you pass along, and at the Doors and Chambers where you visit. To this God let your Altars blaze with perpetual Fires, and let your Vows and Prayers be preferr'd, that keeping you from Fear of Envy or Calumny, he would be so good as to prosper your Arts, Tricks, and honest Rogueries, those manifest Indications of Ingenuity and Cunning. Adore the Goddess Minerva, not dreadful in her warlike Accoutrements of Spear and Shield, nor ominous with the Bird of Night brooding o'er her Helmet, but in her civil Capacity, as she is the Patroness of Physic and Health, who quitting her Shield, laying aside her Spear, dismissing her Owl, dress'd in the Livery of Æsculapius, and kind and affable, with her Snakes gently hissing; is always ready to furnish you with Remedies, tho' you are idle in the mean time, or even tho' you sleep. Avoid the beggarly Muses, those contemptible Wenches that have liv'd to be old Maids, and indeed never had Fortunes considerable enough to purchase Husbands, as you would the Plague: and hate the Name of Poet as you hate a Toad; lest the ignorant People should think

Et numerosa harmonia Et concentu se hominum mentes fascinare Poetae stultis persuadeant ; vos chori Clinici quotidianam miserorum auribus cantilenam insusurrante, quae certissima salutis spe facta, ex tenacissima Euclionis arca nummos excantet. Secessus Et sola loca, in quae, ut insaniam atra bile commoti Poetae augeant, Et miseras montibus Et sylvis tenera Et delicata querela narrent Et deplorent, se abdere solent, effugite. Museum, in quo, ut claudi sutores, totos dies steriliū artium cultores desident, araneis Et muscis incolendum relinquire. Coetus mulierum, conventus hominum celebrate, per urbem concursando, vias easdem iterando, aegrotorum cubilia perambulando, non linguae aut oris, sed manuum Et pedum ministerio famam Et nobilitatem in ultimas orbis partes propagate.

Finem dicendi jam facere sine ulla reprehensione liceret, Et ultimam eruditi chori classem silentio praeterire. Praeterquam enim quod multa jam aliis dicta in suam causam interpretari possint, quid apud sapientiae Professores, qui sua se virtute involvunt, Et nihil extra se quaerunt, oratio mea efficere poterit, quod non ipsi Et sua sponte efficere consueverunt ? Nobili artium fastidio, absolutissimi naturae interpretes, Et omnis literaturae contemtionē humilitatem, ad quam praeter meritum, ut capite censi, detrusi estis, compensate. Pythagorae, cujus dicta Pythiis responsis erant veraciora, vestigia premite ; qui rogatus, qua maxime arte consideret, nullam se scire respondit, sed esse Philosophum. Et licet numquam paupertatem expugnare, Et detrita pallia purpuratis vestibis mutare potueritis, titulo tamen

Et

you use C Patients Bo
they encl Numbers, ty in the
them wicl Money o
Hunks.
Poets use
splenetic their Dist Museum, ences fi Stall, lea quent th spread y the Earth
sation, trotting over an
I mi
lence th
ny Thi what c who v nothing ally an Ye m
that H a nobl
ning.
were what none,
been bare

you use Charms to conjure the Devil out of your sick Patients Bodies. Let the Poets make Fools believe that they enchant the Mind with Harmony and the Power of Numbers, You Chamber-Choristers warble a constant Ditty in the Ears of your poor Patients, which by inspiring them with sure and certain Hopes of Health, may shake Money out of the Coffer, even of the most close-fisted Hunks. Fly those Retirements and solitary Places where Poets use to conceal themselves when they brood o'er their splenetic Melancholy, and in soft gentle Complaints utter their Distress to the Woods and Mountains. As for the Museum, in which those that cultivate unprofitable Sciences sit whole Days together like lame Cobblers in a Stall, leave it to the Possession of Flies and Spiders. Frequent the Visits of Women, and the Clubs of Men; and spread your Glory and Reputation to the utmost Parts of the Earth, not by the Merit of your Discourse or Conversation, but the Assiduity of your Hands and Feet; by trotting all over the Town, by plodding the same Streets over and over, and walking from Bed to Bed.

I might now very decently conclude, and pass in Silence the last Class of the Learned. For, besides that many Things already said may be interpreted in their favour, what can my speaking do with the Professors of Wisdom, who wrap themselves up in their own Virtue, and desire nothing from without, other than what they have habitually and of their own accord accustom'd themselves to? Ye most absolute Interpreters of Nature, make up for that Humility to which you are undeservedly degraded, by a noble Disdain of Arts, and a general Contempt of Learning. Tread in the Steps of Pythagoras, whose Sayings were truer than the Pythian Oracles, who being ask'd what Art he most relied on, answer'd that He understood none, but was a Philosopher. And tho' you have never been able to shake off Poverty, and to change your tattered bare Coats for Robes of Purple, yet value your selves, and & magnifica appellatione, quasi unici sapientiae & virtutis studiosi, supra omnes capita extollite. Invideant & subducant vobis auditores omnium disciplinarum Professores; invadant licet in possessiones vestras primorum ordinum ductores, & perplexas de Deo & Mente nostra disputationes, colorato ad doctrinam suam titulo adgregent, & ad religionis securitatem subtilius & certius se enodare posse jactent. Veram se, non simulatam, Philosophiam profiteri gloriantur Juris prudentes. Rerum causas & principia se non ex confectis originibus, sed ipso opere & usu cognoscere & perspicere Medici mentiantur. Irrideant vos & per ora hominum traducant dicacis eloquentiae institores, & Poëticae urbanitatis scurrae. Vos domi vobis plaudite & exultate, quod illa, quam profitemini, disciplina, sit omnium artium parens & procreatrix. Ingratas & inofficiosas filias, quae origine sua erubescunt, abdicate, & omni sapientiae hereditate in aeternum private. Memores aurei dicti, qui beatam vult vitam vivere, philosophetur, adventitias & auxiliares literarum copias, ab instructissimis horreis remove. Antiquas scilicet Grammaticus vobis linguas commendarem? qui quotidie novas vobis formatis, & nauseam deliciis vestris nobis moventes, sermonem excuditis, quem neque Graecum, neque Romanum, sed ex utroque mixtum, vernaculum & domi natum quis dicat, & qui tamen terrarum orbem implevit. Ex foetentis Ennii sterculinio, ex olido Pacuvii fimeto, vos, rerum non fabularum auctores, aurum colligere juberem? qui ex splendidissimis Platonis & Aristotelis gazis lucidissimas gemmas depromitis, quarum luce & splendore omnes mentis tenebrae discutiuntur. Ad Rhetorum vos scholas ablegarem? qui quotidie vobis apparere om-

nina

exalt your Title of Professor
 your Scho
 Vanguard
 as Part o stions cor body can themselv
 is a real, fancy tha ciples of Use and
 and the thro' the
 in that t genitor o your Dau
 of Door Title to Him tha Room in
 of Lear rian, re
 who da Surfeit
 ing whi
 up of b
 all the
 of Thir
 Dungh
 Pacuv
 rich Ca
 stre dis
 You to you are

exalt your Heads above the rest of the World, upon your Title of being Lovers of Wisdom and Virtue. Let the Professors of all other Sciences envy you, and steal away your Scholars; Let the Divines, the Commanders of the Vanguard, invade your Territories, and by claiming them as Part of their Doctrine, carry off those perplex'd Questions concerning God and the Soul, and pretend that no body can so finely and certainly unravel those Points as themselves. Let the Lawyers boast that what they profess is a real, not a pretended Philosophy. Let the Physicians fancy that they see into, and know the Causes and Principles of Things, not from strain'd Hypotheses, but from Use and Experiment. Let the Dealers in noisy Eloquence, and the Buffoon Poets, ridicule and make a Jest of You thro' the World: Yet hug your selves and rejoice at home, in that the Science which you profess is the Parent and Progenitor of all others. Turn the ungrateful and undutiful Sluts your Daughters, who are thus ashamed of their Family, out of Doors, and for ever disinherit them from all Right and Title to Wisdom. Remembring that golden Saying, Let Him that would live happily be a Philosopher, allow no Room in your well-fill'd Granaries for auxiliary foreign Stores of Learning. For should I, in the Person of a Grammarian, recommend to you the ancient Languages? You, who daily frame your selves new ones, and giving us a Surfeit of your Delicacies, hammer out a Way of speaking which one can't say is either Greek or Latin, but mixt up of both, born and bred here at Home, and yet in use all the World over. Should I set You, who are Authors of Things and not Fables, upon picking Gold out of the Dunghil of fusty Ennius, and the stinking Compost of Pacuvius? You, who cull the brightest Gems from the rich Cabinets of Plato and Aristotle, whose sparkling Lustre dispels all the Darknes of the Mind. Should I send You to the Schools of the Rhetoricians? when I know you are so intimately acquainted with Logic, who is Door-keeper.

mium artium, & sanctae in primis Eloquentiae janitricem, Logicam video, quae omnes aditus ad inveniendi, partiendi, & disputandi facilitatem re-cludit; & magica quadam efficacitate pueros, paullo ante elingues, de rebus, quas nondum intelligunt, ignoto eruditis sermone praemte garrere docet. Ad ornandi & amplificandi praecepta ego vos demitterem? quibus divina illa disceptandi magistra Dia-lectica, tot acumina, tot captiones, tot connexas conjunctiones, tot laqueos, quibus mentes irretiuntur, subministrat: ad Ciceronis de Oratore & dicen-di arte dialogos, ad pompam magis & splendorem, quam utilitatem nullo ordine & ratione effectos? ad scepticas & sinuosas Fabii institutiones Oratorias vos abire juberem? qui ex Cleantibus apotheca & Chryseppi lecythis fucos, & fallacia magis & colorata pigmenta profertis. Historias ab origine rerum, regnorum ordines, rerumpublicarum vicissitudines vobis enarrarem? qui ante mare & terras, quid factum fuerit, vel fieri potuerit, mente vestra for-matis. Per orbem terrarum, ut quid agant ho-mines cognoscatis, circumducerem? qui mentem & oculos in coelo defixos tenetis, & alios invisitados & inauditos annalium conditoribus orbes, montibus, silvis, fluviis, urbibus, & incolis instructos, digito demonstratis. Ad insanientis & otiosi ingenii oblectamentum Poëticen si jam abducere vellem, nulla ratione possem: ita enim omnem fingendi & praeter veri speciem nova excogitandi vim consumpsistis, ut materies carmini fabricando deesset.
 Tantam quoque & tam illustrem ex commentitiis rerum causis famam reportastis, ut vel unius sectae Philosophicae auctor omnes omnium seculorum Poëtas & fabularum architectos obscurer. Stulti & populo persuadeant vaticinantes Poëtae, divino se furore

keeper to all the P and dispo cou'd sc ly, in a
 Should I
 Amplific
 course, Quibbles Gins to you go speaking more for sceptical jeet? Y more art pots of story fro doms, a form in done,
 Should I
 selves w
 your Ey Worlds
 Annals, and Inha Poetry, Wit, I already f vention,
 out a Pe glorious
 that the
 all the P
 the Wor

keeper to all Arts, and especially holy Eloquence, and opens all the Passages to an easie Method of inventing, dividing and disputing: by a magical Power teaching Boys, who cou'd scarce speak before, to prate and chatter very readily, in a Language perfectly unknown to Men of Letters. Should I dispatch you to the Rules of Embellishment and Amplification? You, whom that divine Mistress of Discourse, Dialectic, furnishes with so many Points and Quibbles, so many Conjunction Copulatives, and so many Gins to insnare and catch the Mind withal. Should I bid you go to Cicero's Discourses upon Oratory, and the Art of speaking, made without any reasonable Design or Order, more for Pomp and Shew than any real Profit? or to the sceptical and intricate Institutions of Fabius upon that Subject? You, who produce a Varnish and Colouring much more artificial from the Stores of Cleanthes, and the Gallypots of Chrysippus. Should I give you an Account of History from the beginning, of the Successions of Kingdoms, and Revolutions of Commonwealths? You, who form in your own Minds what was or might have been done, even before the Earth and the Sea were made. Should I carry You round about the World to inform your selves what People are doing? You, who are ever keeping your Eyes fix'd upon the Heavens, and can point out other Worlds unknown to and unheard of by our Writers of Annals, furnish'd with Mountains, Woods, Rivers, Cities and Inhabitants. If I should attempt to carry you off to Poetry, that favourite Delight of idle good-for-nothing Wit, I could never compass my Design: for you have already so wasted all your Fund of Improbability and Invention, that you would have no Materials left to furnish out a Poem. And You have already gain'd so great and glorious a Reputation from your fictitious Causes of Things, that the Author of one Philosophical Sect would eclipse all the Poets and Inventors of Fables, that ever were in the World. Let the canting rhiming Crew make Fools and furore & ætherio spiritu adflari; unusquisque vestrum se Sapientem illum, sola mentis cogitatione formatum, Deo aequalem esse venditet, & universam Philosophantium eorum Deo, rerum opifici, consiliarium & adiutorem adfidere jure gloriatur.

 Hanc universi machinam vos construxistis & fabri-castis; semina & ortus rerum, vestra manu jacta, excitastis; principia coeli, terrae, & maris posuistis, & illo, quo conspiciamus, ordine conservatis.
 Denique, quod nulli eruditorum ordini contigit, licet sapientiae adversarii & detrectatores calumnientur, nihil adhuc esse repertum, in quo industria futuri seculi acquiescat, aut innitatur, nihil tam absurdum esse, quod non ab aliquo Philosophorum sit dictum, nullus tamen inter disciplinae vestrae conditores & principes extitit, qui non sectatores innumeros in-venerit, & familiae nomen suum imposuerit.
 Tueamini ergo acriter, sapientes, locum, & in gradu constantiter state. Si antiqua dogmata & sci-ta tempore exolescere, & à recentioribus aboleri vi-deatis, nova & inaudita ab integro comminiscamini.
 Perniciosam modo literatorum societatem vitate, & si ad summas & curules eruditorum sellas, quae vobis debentur, adspirare non permittatur, ex illo certe, in quem olim sine ullo fastu irrepistis, artium liberalium ordine, ne pestis in hirsuta pectora serpat, omnis elegantiae & politioris doctrinae magistros deturbate.

Sed concludendam esse orationem, & fatigata tam longo sermone patientia vestra, A. nihil su-peresse video, nisi ut brevissima peroratione juven-tutis animos, collectis & in unum contractis argumentis,

and People inspir'd, an of you me wise Perso
 the same whole Fra
 God the M
 'Tis You
 the Univer and produ the Found serve them withstand liciously g
 which the that there Philosoph
 any other der or I innumera call'd aft bravely k you find Counten
 Only avo
 if you a mount a be sure which y Masters
 happen t Distemp
 But I clude m pretty v
 to do,

and People of vulgar Apprehensions believe that they are inspir'd, and fill'd with a Blast of divine Fury : every one of you may make no scruple of averring, that He is that wise Person as to be made up wholly of Thought, and of the same Stamp with God ; and may justly boast that the whole Fraternity of Philosophers sits in Privy-Council with God the Maker of all Things, advising and assisting him. 'Tis You that have contriv'd and fashion'd this Frame of the Universe ; 'tis your Hands that have sow'd the Seeds, and produc'd the Increase of all Things ; You have laid the Foundations of the Heavens, Earth and Seas, and preserve them in that Order which we behold. Lastly, notwithstanding the Enemies and Detractors of Wisdom maliciously give out, that nothing has been found out yet which the Industry of the next Age will rest satisfied in ; that there is nothing so absurd but has been said by some Philosopher or other ; yet, tho' it has never happen'd to any other Class of the Learned, there never was any Founder or Head of a Sect among You that did not find an innumerable many Followers, and made the Family be call'd after his own Name. Therefore, ye wise Men, bravely keep your Post, and insist upon your Rank. If you find the old Hypotheses grow stale, and put out of Countenance by the Modern, begin again and invent more. Only avoid the ill Company of the Men of Letters ; and if you are not permitted according to your Deserts to mount and possess the uppermost Seats of the Learned, be sure to turn out from that Class of the liberal Arts which you have humbly admitted your selves into, all the Masters of Elegance and polite Literature, lest they should happen to infect your rugged Breasts with their contagious Distemper.

But I see, Gentlemen, that it is time for me to conclude my Discourse ; and your Patience being by this pretty well tir'd, there remains nothing more for me to do, but to sum up my Arguments by way of Inference, mentis, ne pestilenti illo fidere se adflari sinerent, admonerem & exhortarer. Sed si Doctoribus plane persuafero, inutiles & calamitosas gravioribus disciplinis nostras esse literas, quis invalidas jam dicendo vires in turbam discipulorum vehementius excitandam, me exhaustire suaderet? Ut armenta pastoribus, qui illis imperant, ita vos, o dociles & cerei animi, praeceptoribus obtemperare novi. Si tamen rari inter vos, in verba magistrorum jurare non soliti, reperiantur, nullus metuo, ne hac in parte ab eorum dictatis discedentes, mihi adversemini. Si tamen rationes meae & argumenta nihil efficere, nec ipsa artium nostrarum vilitas & damnoſa contagio vos ab earum cultu detertere poterunt, spectate, quaeso, ad praemia & honores, illiteratis & humaniorum artium contemptoribus posita & persoluta. Haec ut consequamini, auctor & impulsor vobis existo, ut hunc per Academias, non dicam cursum, sed volatum magis magisque corripatis; ut praeteritis Sirenium scopulis & insidiis, blandis Literatorum & Poëtarum cantibus aures obstruatis: & praeveſti vada & breviam, quae latissimus Historiarum & Antiquitatum pontus occultat, ad portum illam, omnis laboris & industriae finem & requiem, Doctoris titulum, remis & velis festinetis. Tunc non modo negligere omnem antiqui sermonis curam, & variae eruditionis ex memoria vestigia, si qua supersunt, delere, sed ipsius etiam doctrinae, cujus insignibus decorati estis, oblivisci vacabit. Ne tamen nihil egisse vos in Academiis, & pecuniam doctrinae auctoribus & instrumentis destinatam, inutiliter profuisse parentes & amici criminantur, ut periculum faciant in alea & ludicris, in calido & vino potando, in comissionibus noctur-ference, and Preservative

tial Blast. N ctors, that gag'd in, i and weigh exhausted Fry? You
obedient;
Flocks ob are some Measures, upon this
me. But nor the V sufficient look I be are propo those that will put y
you on m but to tak ties; that may stop and Liter lands wh Antiquity
which is the Title
ly to neg out of yo even to Graduate that you
the Mor
Masters,

ference, and leave them upon the Minds of our Youth as a Preservative against their being infected with this pestilential Blast. Now if I shall have thoroughly persuaded the Doctors, that the Learning I have so long been unhappily engag'd in, is useless and hurtful to Studies of a more grave and weighty Nature, who would advise me to fatigue my exhausted Spirits in a needless Dissuasive to the younger Fry? Your soft pliable Tempers; I know, are ductile and obedient; yielding to the Influence of your Preceptors, as Flocks observe the Voice of the Shepherd. But if there are some few among you who are not sworn to their Measures, I am in no fear that your differing from them upon this Account may be the Occasion of your opposing me. But if my Reasons and Arguments are of no Force, nor the Vileness and contagious Nature of my Studies sufficient to discourage you from the Pursuit of them, look I beseech you to the Rewards and Honours which are propos'd to, and often attain'd by, the illiterate, and those that despise human Learning. I am the Man that will put you in the Way how to obtain these; and spur you on more and more, I wont say to run your Course, but to take your Flight to this Purpose thro' the Universities; that escaping the Rocks and Snares of the Sirens, you may stop your Ears at the flattering Songs of the Poets and Literati: and skipping over the Shallows and Quick-sands which are hid under the wide Sea of History and Antiquity, you may make all possible sail to that Port, which is the End and Rest from all your Labours; I mean the Title of Doctor. Then you will be at leisure, not only to neglect all Regard for the ancient Tongues, and blot out of your Memories all Traces of various Erudition, but even to forget that particular Science in which you are Graduates. But lest your Parents and Friends should find Fault that you have done nothing at the University, and spent the Money idly which was allotted for your Tutors and Masters, desire them but to try you at Cards and Dice, at nocturnis, & grassationibus, in saltatione & concinno membrorum motu, in vestium & capillamenti decora compositione, rogate : & sollertes vos praestabo. His artibus & dotibus, quas ad histrionum & artificum, non Professorum dictata exhibebitis, admirationem popularium excitate, qui immundos & mucosos pueros, tam nitidos & elegantes Doctores in patriam ex Academia remeasse, gratulabuntur. Civium non tantum, sed illustrium & principum virorum gratiam & favorem contemnendo & fastidiendo priscas linguas, & scholasticam doctrinam infamando, conciliate. Honores & magistratus strenue ambite, & ad eos viam, dissimulata Latinae linguae intelligentia, facilitate & nitore linguae Vernaculae, & ante omnia Francicae venustate & lepore munite. Ad hanc toto pectore incumbite : in hanc non modo remotissimae antiquitatis monumenta transfusa, & fidelissime consignata, sed omnium artium & scientiarum mysteria se in Francorum mentes & volumina insinuasse persuasum habete. Hinc ubi uberem & perennem colloquiorum in circulis & conviviiis materiam paraveritis, temporis in Latina lingua addiscenda collocati jacturam, lacrimis numquam inarescentibus & aeterna querela deslebitis. Monumenta Graeca, & Latina opera, ab hirsutis & incomtis parentibus olim effusa, aversimini ; sed eadem, nunc elegantia & cura interpolatorum nitidiori, & moribus seculoque cultissimo magis congruenti amictu, commendata, summa cum admiratione versate. Patrios annales & aviti temporis Historias, olim à Meursiis, Grotiis, Vossiiis, & nescio quibus, sub crasso

the Coffee
up and do ly, at adj swer for complish selves per of Playen
of your M for return when yo and esteem of Person and despise Learning
ferments your Ign Beauties
agreeable Might ;
the great to it ; b insinuate
the French from her semblies Tears a
which the utmost were for but hav
vamp mended
the pol Country
parted sui, Gro

the Coffee-house or the Tavern, at nightly Clubs, and ranting up and down the Streets, at dancing and walking priggishly, at adjusting your Dress and Periwigs; and I will answer for your being well qualified. By such Arts and Accomplishments as these, in which you shall make yourselves perfect, not from the Rules of the Professors, but of Players, Taylors and other Artificers, raise the Admiration of your Neighbours at home, who will congratulate you for returning from the University such nice sleek Doctors, when you went such dirty sniveling Boys. Win the favour and esteem, not only of People of your own Rank, but of Persons of the first Quality and Condition, by scorning and despising the ancient Tongues, and railing at School-Learning. Make a strong Interest for Honours and Preferments, and pave yourselves the Way to them by shewing your Ignorance of the Latin Tongue, your Skill in the Beauties of your own, and especially of the pretty, courtly, agreeable French. Apply yourselves to this with all your Might; and be persuaded that not only the Monuments of the greatest Antiquity are translated and faithfully done into it; but that the Mysteries of all Arts and Sciences have insinuated themselves into the Books and Understandings of the French. And when you have furnish'd your selves from hence with a copious lasting store of Tattle for Assemblies and Circles of the Fair, you will with ever-flowing Tears and ceaseless Complaints, bewail the loss of Time which you have bestow'd upon learning Latin. Have the utmost Aversion for those Greek and Latin Books which were formerly thumb'd over by our rugged Forefathers; but have the highest Veneration for the same Authors vamped up with a new and elegant Paraphrase and recommended in a Dress much more agreeable to the Mode and the polite Taste of the present Age. As for the Annals of your Country and the History of former Times, treacherously imparted to Foreigners in a pedantic Latin Style by the Meur-sii, Grotii, Vossii, and the Lord knows how many servile crasso Batavorum coelo natis, ineptis & servilibus veterum imitatoribus, barbaro sermone in peregrinorum usum proditas, ad tabernas, ubi salsamenta & aleces venduntur, projicite. A politis & comitis Veneris & Cupidinis nepotibus, qui insigni mentis subtilitate & ingenii felicitate omnibus Europae nationibus antecellunt, non modo naenias amatorias, & fabulas Milesias, matronarum & virginum nostratium etiam suavissima oblectamenta, avidè accipite; sed reipublicae nostrae formam, leges, instituta, & fata, non à conductis modo librariorum operis properata, sed à publica largitate auctoratis Declamatoribus, peregrina quidem, sed apud honestos jam pervulgata lingua, elaborata perlustrate. Admiremini mecum, nihil his inquilinis coeli nostri stuporem & frigus, nihil paludum nostrarum nebulosas exhalationes, ex ingenerata alacritate & vigore detraxisse, sed fastidiosos illos barbariae & horroris Graeci & Romani domitores, ita in mores nostros, licet à linguae incultae scabritie abhorreant, transisse, ut ejurata adsentatione regia, dicacitatis popularis & satyricae licentiae tyrocinia, stupente tota Gallia, deponere non erubescant. His delicatae pronuntiationis arbitris, qui in expoliendo agresti Batavorum ore tantum laboris, & sudoris impendunt, hanc saltem gratiam referte, ut ne horrendo Belgicarum vocum sono & inamabili stridore aures tam teneras radatis. Exoleti sermonis inimicis, & doctarum linguarum everforibus plenam fidem habete, Romanam, perdiscendi difficultate & molestia odiosam, dudum ab elegantioribus viris neglectam & contemptam adseverantibus; eamque, ut exiguam & vilem scholasticae eruditionis portunculam, ad paucos paedagogos, tristes & morosos, esse relegatam. Francicae vero tantam esse facilitatem & suavitatem, tam illustrem celebritatem, ut

poor Imita
the Dutch, Penny-wor
these fine f all the Na Chansons d
of our We of our Rep not as they of those ri Writers au Royal; in of Breedin
me that th Exhalation natural Cl they live Greek and Customs,
guage, th
jur'd all o narch, th
so peculi
from thei ledge you ciation, w Tone of such ren ness of I obsolete
when th
the diffi neglecte subsists a four mo
and plea

poor Imitators of the Ancients, born in the foggy Air of the Dutch, banish them to the Grocer's Shops to wrap up Penny-worths of Butter and Pickled-Herring. Learn from these fine finical Domesticcs of Venus and Cupid, who excel all the Nations of Europe in Wit and Politics, not only Chansons de l'Amour, and Romances, those dear Delights of our Women and Girls, but take a View of the Form of our Republic, it's Laws, Institutions and Revolutions, not as they are hastily patcht up by the mercenary Labours of those that drudge for the Press, but elaborately done by Writers authoriz'd with public Pensions, Historiographers Royal; indeed in a foreign Tongue; but such as all Men of Breeding are very well acquainted with. Wonder with me that the Heaviness and Cold of our Air, and the foggy Exhalations of our Marshes have taken off nothing from the natural Chearfulness and Spriteliness of these People while they live amongst us; but these proud Scorers of the Greek and Roman Barbarisms, have so come over to our Customs, tho' they are mortal Enemies to our scurvy Language, that to the Amazement of all France, having abjur'd all cringing Compliances and Flatteries to their Monarch, they are not asham'd to lay aside that Talkativeness so peculiar to their Country, and the saucy Airs in which, from their Childhood, they have been nurs'd up. Acknowledge yourselves oblig'd to these Judges of delicate Pronunciation, who have taken so much Pains in polishing the rough Tone of the Hollanders, at least so far as never to grate such tender Ears with the horrid and disagreeable Harshness of Dutch. Give all possible Belief to these Enemies of obsolete Learning and Opposers of the Ancient Tongues, when they assure you that Latin being become odious for the difficulty and trouble of learning it, has been long since neglected and despis'd by all the Beau Monde, and only subsists as a vile Portion of School Learning, among a few four morose Pædagogues. But that the French is so easy and pleasant and so much in vogue, that since it has prevail'd ut cum per omnium jam virorum coetus, per muliebria senacula pervaserit, spem non vanam novae eloquentiae architecti conceperint, illa non modo curias & fora, sed omnes Academiarum cathedras brevi personaturas: & ipsos Humanitatis antiquatae Professores, nisi moribus seculi nitidissimis obsequentes rusticitatem ejurent, ad ludos literarios, in ultimo Septemtrione & Moscovia excitatos, brevi demigraturos.

D I X I.

vail'd so m
blies of W have no fr
Courts of
fities: and less they th Politeness furthest Pa
masters in

vail'd so much among the Committees of Men and Assemblies of Women, the Contrivers of this new Eloquence have no small Hopes that it will obtain not only in the Courts of Justice, but even in the Chairs of the Universities: and that the Professors of antiquated Humanity, unless they throw off their Rusticity and comply with the Politeness of the Times, shall shortly be detach'd into the furthest Parts of the North, to supply the Want of Schoolmasters in his Czarish Majesty's Dominions.

I have done.

47
H
O R
d
S
L
m